THE

PREFACE.

TO make the following work the more uſeful and acceptable, I purpoſe to give ſome account

I. Of the original, progreſs, and increaſe of monaſteries in England and Wales.

II. Of the different orders of monks, nuns, and friers.

III. Of the difference of abbies, priories, etc. of the officers in thoſe houſes; and ſomething of the benefit and diſadvantage of them to the nation.

IV. Of the diſſolution of theſe religious ſocieties.

V. Of this work, and what the editor hath done towards it.

I. As to the original of monks in this iſland, it hath been thought by ſome to have been as early as the firſt plantation of Chriſtianity therein; for a very learned gentleman[a] tells us, "It is probable, that ſome of the Druids, having been converted "from the Pagan religion (whereof they were the prieſts) became our firſt monks, "being thereunto much enclined by the ſeverity of their former diſcipline." And (to omit, for the great improbability of it, what the Wincheſter hiſtorian[b] ſaith of king Lucius's founding an abby in that city for monks of the order of St. Mark the evangeliſt) authors of ſome credit[c] have aſſerted the college or monaſtery of Bangor or Banchor in Flintſhire to have been as old as A. D. 182. though others, with greater probability, have placed it almoſt three hundred years later[d].

'Tis not unlikely but that ſeveral Chriſtians, to avoid the heat of Dioclesian's perſecution, which raged fiercely here about A. D. 303[e]. might withdraw themſelves into ſolitary places, and live there in an aſcetic way[f]. The troubleſome times, which ſoon after[g] followed by the Romans hard uſage of the Britains, and the invaſions of the Scots from Ireland, the Picts and Attacots from the north, and the Saxons and Franks from the eaſt and ſouth[h], might poſſibly further incline contemplative perſons to flee into caves, foreſts, and ſuch like ſolitudes, and ſpend their time there in reading the ſcriptures, and other duties of religion, tho' under no other tye or vow but what they impoſed upon themſelves.

But the learned biſhop Stillingfleet (to whom the church antiquities of this nation owe their greateſt light) is of opinion, that the Britiſh monaſteries are no older than St. Patric[d]; and tho' Capgrave[i] and from him Bale and Pits ſay, that Pelagius the heretic, who floriſhed about A. D. 400. was abbat of Bangor, that judicious prelate ſaith [a], “ There is no probability at all in the monkiſh tradition of Pelagius's being “ abbat of Bangor; and there is not much more of Bangor's being ſo famous a mo- “ naſtery at that time, or of Pelagius's being a monk therein. For the Britiſh mona- “ ſteries were no older than St. Patric's time; and in Pelagius's time thoſe were called “ monks at Rome, who, having no office in the church, retired from the common “ employments of the world, for ſacred ſtudies and devotion: And where any number “ of theſe lived together, that was called a monaſtery.” This is confirmed by William of Malmſbury, who calls Glaſtonbury the oldeſt monaſtery he knew in England [b], and yet ſaith, it was formed into a monaſtery by St. Patric. “ For after St. Patric (ſaith “ he) had converted the Iriſh to the Chriſtian faith, A. D. 433. he came over into this “ iſland, and finding at Glaſtonbury twelve anchorites, he gathered them together, “ and making himſelf abbat, taught them to live according to monaſtic rules [c].” The monaſtic life is generally allowed to have been begun in the eaſt, and not to have been brought even to Rome itſelf till about A. D. 340 [d]. Some time after St. Martin of Tours carried it firſt into France [e], and St. Patric, being his nephew and having been with him in his journey to Rome, probably learned it of him, and was the firſt author of it in England [f] as well as Ireland.

[f] This ſeems to have been the true original of monkery, "The perſecutions, which attended the firſt "ages of the goſpel, forced ſome Chriſtians to retire "from the world, and live in deſerts and places moſt "private and unfrequented, in hopes to find the "peace and comforts amongſt beaſts which were denied them amongſt men: And this being the caſe "of ſome very extraordinary perſons, their example "gave ſo much reputation to retirement, that the "practice was continued when the reaſon ceaſed which "firſt began it; and after the empire became Chriſtian, inſtances of this kind became numerous, and "thoſe, whoſe ſecurity had obliged them to live ſeparately and apart, were united into ſocieties." About A. D. 512. the Britiſh hiſtorians report, that St. Dubritius, archbiſhop of St. David's, founded twelve monaſteries, and taught his monks to live, after the manner of the Aſians and Africans, upon the work of their own hands.

The learned Mr. Camden thinks that Congellus [g] firſt brought the monaſtic way of living into Britain about A. D. 530. But it was certainly here before that time. And though Bale [h] (and after him Pits) ſaith that Congellus about this time turned the college of philoſophers at Bangor into a convent of monks of the apoſtolic order, and became the firſt abbat of it, archbiſhop Uſher ſaith [i] that the Bangor monaſtery built by Congellus was at Ulſter in Ireland, and not in Britain. But whenſoever the Bangor monks were firſt inſtituted, it is plain from Gildas [k] that they had a rule; for he mentions “ Monachorum decreta et monachi votum;” but whether the rule of the Welſh monaſteries was the ſame with that inſtituted at Glaſtonbury by St. Patric, is unknown, ſave only that Sr. Roger Twiſden ſaith [l], “ The monks of Bangor were not unlike the “ order of St. Baſil, if not of it.”

If Tho. Rudburn may be relied on, St. Auſtin found monks in St. Savior's church at Canterbury at his firſt coming thither [m].

But upon the converſion of the Pagan Saxons (who then domineer'd over all that part of Britain ſince called England) monaſteries were founded wherever Chriſtianity got footing. St. Auſtin and his followers erected ſeveral in Kent, and the Scottiſh biſhops and monks did the ſame amongſt the Northumbrians; tho' after the death of St. Auſtin, the monks in the ſouth parts were much diſcouraged; for Bede ſaith [n], “ That about A. D. 640. Earcongota, daughter to Earcombert king of Kent, was “ made nun at Brige [in France] becauſe at that time, there being very few monaſte- “ ries in Britain, many went to the Religious houſes in France, for the ſake of a mo- “ naſtic life; and they alſo uſed to ſend their daughters thither to be taught and de- “ voted to the ſervice of God, etc.” But after the Weſt Saxons and Mercians were converted to Chriſtianity, monaſteries were every where built with great zeal for God's glory, and very liberally[a] endowed by the Saxon kings; and continued in a very floriſhing condition 'till about A. D. 832. when the Danes firſt invaded this kingdom, and began thoſe great devaſtations, which, contrary to their contracts, they often repeated 'till they brought the nation to ruin. In many of theſe incurſions, and particularly in that fatal one under Inguar and Hubba, A. D. 866. and the three following years, they plundered and burnt the monaſteries, ſtripped, wounded, and very often killed the poor defenceleſs monks[b], and almoſt put an end to their inſtitution. For, after this there were but few remains of any monaſteries left, and thoſe were generally poſſeſſed by the married clergy[c]; Glaſtonbury and Abington indeed retained their monks[d]; but even at Wincheſter[e] and Canterbury[f] there were ſo few monks in king Alfred's reign, that they were forced to permit Seculars to aſſiſt them in performing the divine offices. Nay, Gervaſius ſaith[g], that the name of an abbat was then ſcarce known, and very few then living had ever ſeen a convent of monks. But St. Dunſtan being promoted to the ſee of Canterbury by king Edgar about A. D. 960. and countenanced by him, was the great reſtorer of the monaſtic way of living, by repairing the ruinous churches and Religious houſes, diſplacing the Seculars, who had crept into them, and filling them with monks and nuns. It was by his advice that king Edgar made a reformation of our Engliſh monks in the council at Wincheſter A. D. 965. and framed a conſtitution for them compoſed partly out of the rule of St. Benedict, and partly out of the ancient cuſtoms of our Engliſh devotees. This was called Regularis Concordia Anglicae Nationis, and is publiſhed in Saxon and Latin by the learned Selden in his Spicilegium after Eadmerus[h]. According to this rule were monaſteries founded and governed in the ſouthern and more civilized part of Britain, and their number increaſed ſo much, that this king is ſaid to have erected or rather refounded forty ſeven[i]. Neither were new monaſteries only founded, but all the lands, which, by the iniquity of the times, had been taken away from Religious places, were reſtored by the authority of the king, and the care of Dunſtan archbiſhop of Canterbury, Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, and Wulſtan biſhop of Worceſter.

AFTER this king's death, the Secular clergy began to lift up their heads again, and were encouraged by Elfere[k] prince of Mercia, who expelled the monks out of the monaſteries in that province, and reſtored the Secular canons; and thereupon enſued ſome ſharp conteſts between the monks and Seculars in the time of king Edward the younger at the ſynods of Wincheſter[l], Caln[m], and Ambreſbury[m]; where being either convinced by pretended miracles[n], or over-ruled by the power of archbiſhop Dunſtan, and others of the monks party, the Seculars were ſilenced, and the monks quietly enjoy'd their lands till the Conqueſt.

BUT this muſt be underſtood of the ſtate of monaſteries in the ſouth parts of the iſle. In the kingdom of the Northumbrians monaſteries were more frequent even from their firſt receiving Chriſtianity. For the new converts here being mightily taken with the powerful preaching and exemplary lives of Aidan and the Scotch monks, were

were very zealous in building and endowing Religious houſes; and they had ſo great an opinion of the ſanctity of theſe monks and their way of living, that it was very uſual for their nobles [a], and ſometimes even for their kings and queens [b] to renounce the world (as they called it), and to put on Religious habits. As in the ſouth parts it was uſual to ſend their children into France [c] to learn the monaſtic way of living, ſo in the north they were ſent into Ireland to be inſtructed in the monaſteries there. But, as Simon Dunelmenſis ſaith [d], "After the devaſtation of that country A. D. 867. by the "Danes, who reduced the churches and monaſteries to aſhes, Chriſtianity was almoſt "extinct, very few churches (and thoſe only built with hurdles and ſtraw) were re-"built. But no monaſteries were refounded for almoſt two hundred years after. The "country people never heard of the name of a monk, and were frighted at their very "habit, till ſome monks from Winchelcomb brought again the monaſtic way of living "to Durham, York, and Whitby."

It may be neceſſary here, firſt, to obſerve ſomething concerning nunneries before the Conqueſt. That we had nuns in the time of the Britains is very probable, becauſe the Iriſh and Scots allowed of them before the coming of St. Auſtin; and the conſtitution of the Britiſh churches was in a manner the ſame with theirs. Leland ſaith expreſly, that Merlin's mother was a nun [e] at Caermarthen: And ſome ſay, that St. David's mother was a nun [f] alſo. Whatever monaſtic rules St. Auſtin might introduce, we meet with none relating to Religious virgins, yet in the next century we find them very frequent amongſt the Saxons. King Eadbald founded, about A. D. 630. a nunnery at Folkeſtone in Kent, which probably was the firſt in England: And therefore it was an overſight in Mr. Weaver [g] and Sr. William Dugdale [h] to ſay that Berking in Eſſex was the firſt; for that was not founded till A. D. 675. about which time there ſeem to have been a great many nuns. For St. Mildred before that time preſided over ſeventy in one houſe in the iſle of Thanet [i]. A. D. 694. abbeſſes were in ſo great eſteem for their ſanctity and prudence, that they were ſummoned to the council at Beccanfield, and the names of five (and not one abbat) are ſubſcribed to the conſtitutions there made [k]. Biſhop Aidan made Hieu (who was afterwards foundreſs and abbeſs of Hartlepool) the firſt [l] nun amongſt the Northumbrians, A. D. 640. And it was a cuſtom in Northumberland and Scotland in ancient times for monks and nuns to live together [m] in the ſame monaſtery, who were all ſubject to the government of the abbeſs. It was thus particularly at Whitby [n], Repindon [o], Coldingham [p], Beverly [q], and Ely [r].

Secondly, to give ſome account of the Secular clergy, who are ſo much ſpoken of in the eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of the Saxon times, and for the moſt part diſadvantageouſly; becauſe we have no account of them but what is tranſmitted to us by their bittereſt enemies, the monks, and ſuch as favoured the monks. But who, if we knew the truth, might perhaps have lived as much to the glory of God, and the good of mankind, as thoſe who ſpoke ſo much againſt them. And yet 'tis uncertain what the difference between the old Secular canons and the monks was. For hiſtorians, by calling the houſes of the monks, collegia [s], and the houſes of Secular canons, monaſteria [t], confound theſe two ſorts of Religious perſons, and make the opinion of Mr. Wharton [a] not unlikely, viz. That before the reformation by king Edgar and St. Dunſtan, our monaſteries were nothing but convents of Secular married clergy. Nor is the marriage of monks and nuns in thoſe ages unlikely [b]. For Bede tells us [c], that in John of Beverly's time, the abbeſs of a monaſtery then called Vetadun (ſince Watton) had a carnal daughter who was nun of that houſe. On the other hand, ſome of the Seculars obliged themſelves to the vow of chaſtity, and many of them obſerved ſome regular conſtitutions. For the canons of Durham [d] read the pſalms in the ſame order as was required by the rule of St. Benedict. At Peykirk they obſerved the canonical hours of the monks, and took the vows of chaſtity and obedience [e]. And at Canterbury (as Gervaſius obſerves) they wore the habit of the monks, and partly conform'd to their rule. So that in all likelihood the terms of monks and Secular canons were indifferently uſed, or with very little diſtinction till king Edgar's time, when St. Dunſtan enforcing a ſtricter obſervation of St. Benedict's rule, thoſe, that were willing to retain their wives and parochial cures, were termed Secular clerks, and thoſe were called monks or Regulars, who quitted both, according to the conſtitution of that order.

Thirdly, Let it be noted, that the monks of this iſland were never under one rule before the ſecond reformation. For, not to mention the difference between the Britiſh, Scottiſh, and Roman monks, we may obſerve, that almoſt every abbat laid down particular rules of living for thoſe under his juriſdiction; ſo that we meet with the rules of St. Patric, St. Congal [f], St. Columb [f], St. Molva [f], St. Columban [g], St. Carthagus, Segenius, Furſaeus, St. Coman, and others amongſt the Iriſh and Scotch; St. David, St. Aſaph, St. Cuthbert, St. Adhelm, etc. amongſt the Britains and Saxons. Neither did archbiſhop Cuthbert's regulation make an uniformity in theſe matters. For in king Alfred's time there were "diverſi generis monachi [h]." And even after the Conqueſt, at a general viſitation of Religious houſes A. D. 1232. amongſt the Benedictines, there were not two monaſteries that lived after the ſame manner [i].

At the Conqueſt, monaſteries had a deep ſhare in the afflictions of the conquered nation; ſome of the beſt of their manors were ſacrilegiouſly taken away [k], their treaſuries were rifled, and their liberties infring'd by the inſulting Normans. Moſt of the Engliſh abbats [l] being depoſed for little or no cauſes, ſtrangers were preferred to the richeſt abbies in the kingdom, who introduced ſeveral new cuſtoms to the grievance of the old Saxon monks.

The firſt thing, which ſeem'd very hard, was the altering their miſſals: Upon this account what great heats were there in the abby of Glaſtonbury! when Thurſtan the pragmatical Norman abbat would have forced the monks to lay aſide the old Gregorian ſervice [m], which had been uſed there time out of mind, to make uſe of the new devotions of William of Fiſcamp. Theſe and ſeveral other innovations, which were bringing in upon them, were ſtop'd by the pains of Oſmund biſhop of Saliſbury, who compoſed a new ritual, afterwards known by the name of " Miſſale in uſum " Sarum," and generally uſed in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

SECONDLY, another thing, which was a burden to the Religious, eſpecially thoſe of the cathedral convents, was the making Secular prieſts biſhops of thoſe churches. Of this the monks made loud complaints, becauſe it was rarely, or (as they pretended) never heard of in the Saxon times, and even forbid by a poſitive canon made in the time of archbiſhop Theodore, and afterwards confirmed by king Edgar [a]. And therefore ſome Seculars [b], when elected into vacant biſhoprics, would not be conſecrated, till they had taken the monaſtic habit. And the monks, having an utter diſlike to be under the juriſdiction of the Seculars, ſeldom lived peaceably with them; who having never been uſed to the monkiſh inſtitutions, might probably be for altering ſome things, whilſt the monks, being ſtrongly devoted to them, and very jealous of their privileges, complain'd upon the leaſt occaſion of the Secular biſhops acting contrary to the rules and immunities of their order. So that the learned Mr. Wharton ſaith [c], the monks always quarrelled with their biſhops, and the Seculars generally agreed with them [d].

3. A third diſadvantage, occaſioned in monaſteries by the Conqueſt, was the diſtinction which was afterwards made between the lands of the biſhop and the convent. For, during the Saxon times, all the donations were made " Deo et eccleſiae [e]," or to the biſhops, priors, and monks in common. But after the Conqueſt, the biſhops aſſigned what revenues they thought ſufficient to maintain the prior and convent [f], and reſerved the reſt, and generally beſt, of the church lands to the uſe of themſelves and ſucceſſors. This diviſion fell hard upon the monks in many places. For the Canterbury hiſtorian [g] complains, that their archbiſhop had retained the ſervices and fees of the earls, barons, and knights, and allowed the monks none but thoſe of yeomen and huſbandmen. This certainly gave occaſion at firſt for the diſtinction in other monaſteries between the lands of the abbat and the convent; and afterwards for the diſtinct portions of the ſeveral great officers of the houſe. For we never read, till after the Conqueſt, of any grant's being made " in uſum prioris, ſacriſtae, eleemoſy- " narii, cellerarii, camerarii [h]," etc. or as others run in more particular terms, " ad " veſtitum monachorum, ad victum, ad luminaria, ad hoſpitalitatem faciendam, ad " fabricam eccleſiae, ad reparanda eccleſiae ornamenta," and other uſes, to which the donors would have their gifts appropriated.

4. THE laſt grievance which ſhall be mentioned (and which indeed affected the clergy in general) was the Conqueror's charging church lands with military ſervices. This is taken notice of by Matthew Paris [i], but I chuſe to deſcribe it in the words of a later writer [k]. " Whereas (ſaith he) before the Conqueror's time, the clergy held all their " lands by frank almonage, and ſubject to no duties or impoſitions, but ſuch as they " laid upon themſelves in their eccleſiaſtical aſſemblies; this prince finding above a

[b] When Odo biſhop of Sherborn was elected archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 934. he declared himſelf unqualified for it, becauſe he had never been a monk; moſt of our writers indeed think, that he made this objection only from an unwillingneſs to accept that high ſtation; but he would not be conſecrated till he received the Religious habit from the abbat of Fleury. “ third [a] part of the lands of the kingdom in the poſſeſſion of the clergy [a], and the forces of the crown, which conſiſted in knight's ſervice, leſſen'd in proportion to their immunities: He reduced all their lands to the common tenure of knight's fees and baronage, and thereby ſubjected them to an attendance upon the king in his wars, and to other ſervices antiently due, and ſometimes raiſed upon all lands that held in fee from the crown. This innovation touched not only the biſhops, but all the abbats throughout the kingdom, many of whom were endowed with great lands and revenues.”

BUT to carry on the account of the monaſtics here in England. It was in K. William the Conqueror's time, that the third and laſt regulation of monks was made by archbiſhop Lanfranc [b] in the council held at London A. D. 1075. This reformation brought the Engliſh monks nearer the Benedictines than ever they were before, I mean thoſe of the old foundations; for the Cluniac monks were brought into England about the middle of this reign, and met with patrons to build them five houſes: There were likewiſe founded in this king's reign four houſes of Black canons, two or three hoſpitals, thirteen Benedictine abbies and priories, and ſix cells to them, and about fourteen alien priories; whereof the king [c] himſelf built and endowed the great abbies of Battel and Selby, the priory of Hinchinbrook, and four or five alien priories.

KING William Rufus ſucceeded heir to the vices, not the virtues of his father; for he miſerably oppreſſed the Religious, ſeiſed upon the revenues of the vacant abbies and biſhoprics, and would never let them be filled without ſome ſimoniacal bargain. In this king's reign ſeveral of the biſhops [d], of whom Walkeline biſhop of Wincheſter was the chief, made vigorous efforts to expel the monks out of the cathedral churches, and to place Secular canons in their room. They got the king's conſent to it, and had probably accompliſhed it, if archbiſhop Lanfranc, “a man of univerſal goodneſs and approved wiſdom [e]” had not oppoſed it with great courage; and not only brought the king to change his mind, but alſo procured a bull from Rome, prohibiting the like attempts for the future. In the thirteen years of this king's reign there were founded about thirteen Benedictine houſes; five of the Cluniac order; two of Black canons; two colleges, two hoſpitals, and five alien piories, whereof the priories of Armethwayte in Cumberland, and St. Nicolas in Exeter, and the hoſpital of Leonard in York were built and endowed by the king.

K. HENRY I. is recorded to have been a very pious and good prince, an encourager of learning and piety, and one that had a great eſteem for the church and all Religious perſons. He founded nine or ten monaſteries, viz. the epiſcopal ſee and priory of Regular canons at Carliſle, the abbies of Cirenceſter and Merton; the priories of Dunſtaple, St. Dennis near Southampton, Southwike, and Welhove of the ſame order; the ſtately Benedictine abbies of Reading and Hide, and the alien priory at Steventon; as alſo the hoſpitals of St. John in Cirenceſter, Le Mallardry in Lincoln, and St. Mary Magdalene in Newcaſtle. No leſs than five new orders were brought into England in this king's reign: The Knights Hoſpitalars in the firſt year of it; the Auſtin Canons about five years after; the Ciſtertians about A. D. 1128. the canons of the Holy Sepulchre, and the monks of Grandmont. And in the thirty five years of his ſitting upon the throne, there were founded above an hundred and fifty Religious houſes, viz. about twenty alien priories; twenty Benedictine abbies and priories, and fifteen cells to them; near fifty houſes of Auſtin canons; thirteen Ciſtertian, and ſix Cluniac monaſteries, three of Knights Hoſpitalars, one for canons of the Holy Sepulchre, one for the Grandmontenſians; one college, and thirteen hoſpitals.

[a] [a] Sr. Robert Atkins, in his Gloceſterſhire, p. 11. ſaith, that 28,000 knights fees belong'd then to the clergy, out of 60,200. in the whole; but both Sr. W. Temple and he ſeem to ſpeak of the revenues of the clergy in general, viz. Seculars as well as Regulars; and don't ſay what proportion the one bore to the other, nor mention how much was ſhortly after taken away from them. The revenues of the clergy were laid at a fourth part only of the revenues of the kingdom in the twenty ſeventh year of K. Henry 8. as Compl. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 185. Mr. Coller, in his Eccl. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 108. ſaith, the revenues of the monks never did exceed the proportion of a fifth part, and conſidering the leaſes they granted to laymen upon ſmall rents and eaſy fines, it may truly be affirmed their revenues did not exceed the tenth part of the nation.

[c] At the end of an old mſ. of Eccleſiaſtical conſtitutions in the Bodleian library (Junian. 121.) it is ſaid that pope Gregory 6. put this king upon conquering England, and under pretence of penance cauſed him to give much lands to abbies, and that the king thereupon built many houſes of the order of Cluni, becauſe the pope had been a monk of Cluni; but I don't find that he ever founded any Cluniac houſe, unleſs Bermondſey may be ſaid to have been of his foundation, as is ſuggeſted in Mr. Hearne's notes on Peter Langtoft, p. 84.

[e] Sr. William Temple's Introduction, p. 234.

K. Stephen was virtuous, religious, and liberal; and, after the wars between him and Maud the empreſs were ended, a great builder of Religious houſes. To him the Benedictines at Carhow in Norfolk, and Heyham in Kent, the Black canons at Thornholm in Lincolnſhire, and the Cluniacs at Feverſham in Kent owe their foundation and endowments; and the Knights Hoſpitalars their commandries at Creſſing Temple in Eſſex, and Egle in Lincolnſhire: The Knights Templars were brought into this nation in the beginning of this reign; the Premonſtratenſians came in A.D. 1146. and ſoon after the Gilbertine order had its riſe at Sempringham in Lincolnſhire. The troubles, which the kingdom was involved in for a great part of this reign, could not reſtrain the piety and charity of the people from building Religious houſes[a]; for in eighteen years and nine months there were now founded twenty two Benedictine abbies and priories, and three cells to them; five alien priories, thirty two Ciſtertian abbies, twenty three houſes, and four cells of Auſtin canons; five Premonſtratenſian, two Cluniac, and eleven Gilbertine houſes; thirteen preceptories of Knights Templars, one houſe for ſiſters of the Hoſpitalars, one for canons of the Holy Sepulchre; four colleges and twelve hoſpitals.

K. Henry 2. was very obliging to the clergy, eſpecially after the murder of the ſoon canoniz'd Thomas Becket archbiſhop of Canterbury. He founded the firſt houſe the Carthuſians had in England, viz. Witham in Somerſetſhire; as alſo Waltham[b] in Eſſex, Newſtede in Nottinghamſhire, Ivychurch in Wiltſhire, and Marton in Yorkſhire of the Auſtin order; Newſtede in Lincolnſhire for Gilbertine canons; Stonely in Warwickſhire for Ciſtertian monks, and the alien priory of Hagh in Lincolnſhire. In his reign were founded twenty eight[c] Benedictine, twenty ſeven Auſtin, ſixteen Premonſtratenſian, one Carthuſian, two Gilbertine, and five Cluniac monaſteries, two collegiate churches, twenty nine hoſpitals, ten preceptories (Buckland was made the general houſe for all the ſiſters of the Hoſpitalars) twenty ſix alien priories, and, what is more remarkable, nineteen Ciſtertian abbies, notwithſtanding it was contrary to a canon made at a general chapter held A.D. 1151[d]. wherein the erection of any more abbies of that rule was expreſsly forbidden, becauſe there were then above five hundred[e] of them.

In the time of K. Richard 1. the humour of endeavouring to recover the Holy Land from the Saracens mightily prevailed in England, as well as in all other parts of Chriſtendom: And yet, notwithſtanding the money expended in thoſe wars, and in ranſoming the king; there were founded in this ſhort reign, of not full ten years, fourteen houſes of Benedictines, thirteen of Auſtin canons, and eight of Premonſtratenſians, three of the Gilbertine order, four preceptories of Templars, two alien priories, one college, and ſeven hoſpitals. We don't find that this king founded any monaſtery; for he is ſaid to have diſliked all the Religious, and to have mortally hated[f] the Black monks, Ciſtertians, and Templars.

K. John, tho' always prejudiced againſt the eccleſiaſtics, however, founded a ſtately abby for the Ciſtertians at Beaulieu in Hampſhire, to which he made Farendon in Berkſhire a cell; he built alſo the Benedictine nunnery of Lambley in Northumberland, and made Otterington in Devonſhire an alien priory[g]. In this reign of above

[a] Weaver ſaith (Funeral Monuments, p. 278.) there were more abbies built in K. Stephen's reign than in an hundred years before. If he thereby means more Religious houſes in general, we muſt add "in "the like ſpace of time," to make it true; for there were more built in the foregoing reign than in this.

[b] This was founded by earl Harold, A.D. 1062. for Secular canons; and refounded for Regulars, and augmented only by K. Henry 2.

[f] Walt. Hemingford, lib. ii. cap. 73.

[g] He is likewiſe ſaid, in Monaſt. Hibern. p. 152, 153. to have founded, whilſt earl of Moreton, a Benedictine priory at Waterford, and another at Cork in Ireland, and to have made them both cells to the abby at Bath.

ſeventeen years were founded eight houſes of Benedictines, eight of Ciſtertians, and three of Premonſtratenſians, nineteen houſes of Auſtin canons, ſix of Gilbertines, one ſmall Cluniac houſe and ten alien priories, three preceptories of Templars, four of Hoſpitalars, one college, and eighteen hoſpitals.

In the reign of king Henry 3. the greatneſs and riches of the eccleſiaſtics were ſo ſo much envied, that an act of parliament was made in the ninth year [a] of it to reſtrain people from giving lands to them. In the beginning of this reign alſo the Friers preachers and Friers minors came into England, and before the end of it eight ſorts of friers more came amongſt us. And many of them, for the pretended ſeverity of their lives, and their frequent preaching, were at firſt mightily admired by the people, to the great loſs of the Pariſh prieſts, as well as the Regulars. However, in this long reign of fifty ſix years, there were founded nine monaſteries of Benedictines, twenty ſeven of Auſtin canons, eight of Ciſtertians, three of Premonſtratenſians, two ſmall houſes of Cluniacs, of Carthuſians and Gilbertines one each, three preceptories of Knights Templars, and two of Hoſpitalars, twelve alien priories, ſeven colleges, and forty ſeven hoſpitals; beſides twenty eight houſes of Grey friers, twenty five of Black friers, ſeventeen of White friers, four of Auſtin friers, two of Maturine or Trinitarian friers; of Croſſed friers, Bethleemite friers, Friers de Pica, and de Areno, one each; ſix houſes of Friers de Sacco, two of Brethren of St. Anthony of Vienna, and one of Brethren of St. Lazarus: Of theſe the king founded the Ciſtertian abby of Nettely, the ſmall Gilbertine priory of Fordham, the hoſpitals of St. Bartholomew's in Glouceſter, Baſingſtoke, and Oſpring; and ſeveral of the frieries.

K. Edward 1. built the ſtately abby of Vale Royal, and there were built in his reign by others three Ciſtertian abbies more, five Auſtin priories, one Gilbertine, and one Cluniac houſe, two preceptories, three alien priories, twelve colleges, and eighteen hoſpitals; beſides thirteen houſes of Black friers, eleven houſes of Grey friers, and two of minoreſſes or nuns of Clare, thirteen of White friers, thirteen of Auſtin friers, two of Trinitarians, four of Croſſed friers, two of Friers de Sacco, and one of Bonhommes. The affections of the people were now much alienated from the monks by the ſermons, pamphlets, and ſecret inſinuations of the friers, and the generally receiv'd opinion of their exceſſive wealth; ſo that in the ſeventh year of this king, or A. D. 1279. another ſtatute [b] was made to enforce the former, and prevent their growing richer, whereby it was enacted, that no Religious perſon ſhould enter any fees, "either to "buy them, or to receive them of the gift of others, without licence [c] of the chief "lords, upon pain of forfeiture:" And this was explained and enforced by ſeveral other ſtatutes [d] in this and the following reigns. The reaſon given in the act for this reſtraint, is, becauſe the ſervices due from ſuch fees for the defence of the realm were thereby made void, and the lords loſt their eſcaets; but this, however true, ſeems to have been but partly the occaſion of it; and it was probably chiefly intended to prevent the donation of more lands to the Religious [e]; who many ways endeavoured to evade the force of it [f]. But the Secular clergy reaped ſome advantage from the multitude of chantries ſoon after founded. This king in the twenty fourth year of his reign ſeiſed all the alien priories during his wars with the king of France, and removed the alien monks twenty miles from the ſea ſide [g], that his enemies in France might have no aſſiſtance from them.

In the reign of K. Edward 2. we find no great ſtir about the monks or their lands; the Knights Templars were ſeiſed, their lands and goods were confiſcated, and their order diſſolved, on pretence of their vicious lives, and over great wealth and power, but more likely at the inſtigation of the king of France out of mere humour[a]. Their eſtates were at firſt ſeiſed by the king and other lords of the fee, as eſcaets[b]; and "the "juſtices (or judges) preciſely affirmed[b]," that by the laws of the land they might warrantably hold them: But becauſe they had been given for pious and godly ends and uſes, "It ſeemed good to the king, the noblemen, and others aſſembled in par-"liament, for the health of their ſouls, and the diſcharge of their conſciences, to "grant, that the aforeſaid lands and tenements, in demeſns, lordſhips, ſervices, etc. "according to the wills of the givers, ſhall be aſſigned and delivered to other men of "moſt holy religion, to the intent, the fruits, obventions, and profits of the ſame "lands, tenements, and other things may be converted and charitably diſpoſed to "godly uſes[b]." And they were thereupon given by act of parliament[c] to the Hoſpitalars. I don't meet with any monaſtery founded by this unhappy prince, and indeed but one of the Benedictine and one of the Auſtin order in his nineteen years reign; but he is ſaid to have founded the White friers in Scardeburgh, the Auſtin friers in Boſton, and the Black friers in Winchelſea: And there were founded in his time, five houſes of White friers, three of Black friers, ſix of Grey friers, four of Auſtin friers, one of Trinitarians, and one of Croſſed friers; two of the preſent colleges in Oxford, and ſix others, and fourteen hoſpitals.

K. Edward 3. is character'd by the monks to have been a pious as well as valiant prince. For tho' his wars with France would not ſuffer him to give much to Religious houſes, and forced him to be ſevere upon alien priories[d], yet he founded and liberally endowed the Auſtin nunnery at Dertford in Kent, the two large colleges of St. George at Windſor, and St. Stephen at Weſtminſter, and gave to the abby of St. Mary Graces by the Tower in London the revenues of twelve chantries, which were ſeiſed for not having licence of mortmain[a]. And in his reign of fifty one years there were founded four houſes of Auſtin canons, one of Gilbertines, two of Carthuſian monks, ſeventeen hoſpitals, one of the preſent colleges at Oxford, and twenty five others; two houſes of Black friers, eight of Grey friers, five of White friers, eight of Auſtin friers, and one of Bonhommes.

[a] They were greatly accuſed, but there was but little proved againſt them, as appears from the whole proceſs printed in Dr. Wilkins's Councils, vol. iii. from p. 329 to p. 401.

[b b b] The words of the following act. See Statutes at large, vol. i. p. 178. and biſhop Gibſon's Codex, p. 1226.

[c] This was not made till 17 Ed. 2. or A. D. 1323. The order was diſſolved A. D. 1312. and according to Rymer, vol. iii. p. 323. pope Clement 5. granted the lands and goods of the Templars immediately to the Hoſpitalars; and the king confirmed that grant Nov. 28. A. D. 1313. and, ſaving his own and his his ſubjects rights, ordered poſſeſſion to be delivered to them, as Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 513. Rymer, vol. iii. p. 452. But notwithſtanding theſe grants, the king both before and after granted ſome of the Templars lands to laymen and lay uſes, as particularly the king (per cart. 6 Ed. 2. n. 40.) granted to Audomare de Valence earl of Pembroke, the place and houſes called the New Temple in London, with certain lands called Fleet Crofts, and all other the lands and rents in the city and ſuburbs of London, which belong'd to the Templars; and per pat. 8 Ed. 2. p. 1, m.. he granted to Thomas earl of Lancaſter the New Temple in London, with the manors of Thorp Watervile, Aldwinkle, and Achurch in Northamptonſhire; and other lords of the fee probably did the like: For pope John 22. in his bull (dated A. D. 1322.) confirming the Templars lands to the Hoſpitalars denounceth curſes and excommunications againſt "Nonnullos comites et ba-"rones, nobiles, milites, et alios laicos et (quod gra-"vius mentem noſtram amaricat) perſonas eccleſiaſti-"cas dicta bona adhuc violenter occupantes." This bull might perhaps be the occaſion of this ſtatute made the next year. But notwithſtanding this act the Hoſpitalars were (fifteen years afterwards) obliged to give K. Edward 3. an hundred pound for the New Temple, as Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 513, 514. and ibid. p. 545. there is an account of the Hoſpitalars purchaſing the manor of Keteby in Lincolnſhire, which had been granted to laymen. Within two years after the act of parliament before mentioned, K. Edward 2. got a grant from the Hoſpitalars of the manors of Temple Newſon in Yorkſhire, Strode near Rocheſter in Kent, and Denny in Cambridgeſhire, which had belonged to the Templars, and wrote to the ſheriffs of thoſe counties to take them into their hands for his uſe, as Rymer, vol. iv. p. 81. K. Edward 3. granted Temple Newſon and Temple Hurſt, A. D. 1336. to Sr. John Darcy and his heirs male, as cart. 11 Ed. 3. n. 15. and Dugd. Baron. vol. i. p. 372. About five years after, the ſame king granted to Mary St Paul counteſs of Pembroke in fee the manor of Strode, with all the liberties which the Templars had there. Pat. 16 Ed. 3. p. 2. m. ult. ſive penult. She had likewiſe the manor of Denny, as p. 44. of this book; ſo that there were probably many of the Templars lands never enjoyed by the Hoſpitalars. Give me leave to add, that the clergy ſeem to have recovered the tythes of ſuch of the Templars lands as came into lay hands after the annihilation of the order, for by pat. 30 Ed. 3. p. 2. m. 17. the king confirms to the prebendary of South Cave in the metropolitical church of York the tythes of lands in Faxflete in the pariſh of South Cave, which had belonged to the Templars; the ſaid tythes having been before adjudged to him in court Chriſtian.

[d] See in Rymer, vol. ii. p. 778. his directions about ſeiſing alien priories, the lands of which, or large penſions out of them, were granted to noblemen during the war, as Dugd. Baron. vol. ii. p. 74.

In the time of king Richard 2. Wickliff's doctrines were greedily embraced, and the Mendicant friers began to loſe their reputation[b]. The alien priories were ſequeſtred during the wars only, and the head houſes abroad had the king's licence to ſell their lands to the Religious houſes here[c]. There were only four Chartreuſe houſes, ſix hoſpitals, ſix colleges, beſides biſhop Wickham's two colleges at Oxford and Wincheſter, one houſe of Grey friers, and three of Auſtin friers, founded in this reign of twenty two years: For, after the reſtraint laid upon endowing houſes for the Regular orders, the Secular prieſts were more regarded; it being perhaps more eaſy to get licences of mortmain for them, who had not ſo many privileges as the Regulars had; or elſe they were maintained by appropriations[d], which were then no lay fees, and ſo not within the reach of that ſtatute; or, laſtly, it was no hard matter to enfeoffe a proper number of perſons with lands for the payment of certain annual ſtipends to the deans and prebendaries. The erecting ſo many chantries and hoſpitals in the two centuries before the Reformation may alſo be aſcribed to the ſame reaſon. This king founded no monaſtery[e] or college; but gave ſeveral alien priories, which had been ſeiſed by his grandfather, to the Carthuſians at Mountgrace in Yorkſhire, St. Anne's near Coventry, etc.

K. Henry 4. began his reign with ſhewing ſome favour to the alien priories[f]. In his fourth year, or A.D. 1404. was held at Coventry the parliament called The Lack-Learning Parliament, becauſe no lawyers[g] were permitted to be choſen members of it. Methods were therein to be conſidered of, for raiſing money for the defence of the realm againſt the Welſh and Scots at home, and for carrying on a war againſt the Britains, Flemings, and Frenchmen abroad. And ſome among the commons moved, That the clergy ſhould be deprived of all their temporal poſſeſſions to the relief of the king's neceſſities[h]. But archbiſhop Arundel ſhewing what great ſervice the clergy did to the crown for their lands[i], that more of their tenants went to the king's wars than of the tenants of the lay fees; that they were always ready to aſſiſt the king with their prayers, counſels and purſes, and deſiring his majeſty to remember his coronation oath, to advance the honor of the church, and to maintain and cheriſh its miniſters, etc. the king graciouſly anſwered, That he was reſolved to leave the church in as good a ſtate as he found it, or a better. The archbiſhop thereupon told the commons, That the king and his predeceſſors had formerly been adviſed to ſeize the alien priories under pretence of being much enriched by their goods and poſſeſſions, which were certainly of great value: But that the king was not at that time half a mark the richer, becauſe they had begged them: And that their advice to the king now, to ſeize upon the temporalties of the clergy, was to enrich themſelves, and not him. For if the king ſhould in this gratify their wicked deſires, he would not be one farthing the richer the next year after. But, notwithſtanding this repulſe and rebuke, the commons exhibited a new bill againſt the biſhops, abbats, and priors, A. D. 1410. ſetting forth, That by the ſeizure of their eſtates, the king would be enabled to create and provide for fifteen[a] earls, fifteen hundred knights, ſix thouſand two hundred eſquires, and to found one hundred new hoſpitals. But the king rejected their propoſal, and commanded them for the future never to meddle with any ſuch matters[b]. This king built the college of Battlefield in Shropſhire, which with five colleges more, and about ſix hoſpitals, were all the Religious foundations in the thirteen years of his reign.

[e] Lord Zouch dying before he had ſettled the laſt mentioned priory, K. Richard ſaid he would be founder and complete it, but did little beſides giving the alien priories.

[h] Some attempt had been made towards it about twenty years before, viz. 9 Ric. 2. but it proved unſucceſsful. Stow's Annals; Spelman's Sacrilege, p. 159.

[i] Walſingham, p. 180. and Patrick in his Addit. to Gunton, p. 321. ſay, that 2 Ric. 2. or A. D. 1379. every mitred abbat paid as much to the tax as an earl, and 6 s. 8 d. for every monk in his monaſtery. In 18 Ed. 1. or A. D. 1289. the abbat of Bury St. Edmund's paid 666 l. 13 s. 4 d. to the fifteenth, as Cowel's Interpreter ſub voce Quinſieme. In Rymer, vol. ii. p. 75. and in Stevens's Append. p. 108. we have the ſummons of king Edward 1. to the abbats of Ramſey, Weſtminſter, Glaſtonbury, etc. and to the abbeſſes of Shafteſbury, Berking, Wilton, and Wincheſter, to ſend in their reſpective quotas of men and arms towards the wars againſt the Welſh.

In the ſecond year of king Henry 5. there was another attempt made againſt the poſſeſſions of the church, which were now alſo ſaid to be of the ſame value as in the laſt reign. But archbiſhop Chichley ſetting forth to that martial young prince his title to the crown of France, preſſing him to aſſert his right to it, and promiſing in the name of the clergy ſuch a benevolence for the vigorous carrying on the war, as ſcarce ever had been given by the ſubject; the king readily embraced the propoſal, and theſe revenues were once more preſerved. But in a parliament held this ſame year at Leiceſter, all the alien priories were given to the king[c], with all their lands and revenues, except ſuch as were conventual, or had the liberty of chuſing their own prior. But the greateſt part of them were ſtill continued for ſacred uſes, being beſtowed on ſeveral monaſteries and colleges; ſome of them were to remain to the king in fee[d], and very few of them only, either given or ſold to the laity[e]. In this king's ſhort reign were only founded two colleges, beſides the Carthuſian abby at Sheen, and the abby at Syon for nuns of St. Briget, which were built and liberally endowed by the king himſelf.

His ſon and ſucceſſor king Henry 6. a religious but unfortunate prince, founded Eaton college in Buckinghamſhire, and king's college in Cambridge, and endowed them chiefly out of alien priories[f]. And there were founded by others in his reign three colleges and one hall at Oxford, three colleges at Cambridge, eight colleges elſewhere, fifteen hoſpitals, and one houſe of Grey friers.

In the reign of king Edward 4. there were founded ſix colleges, beſides Katharine Hall in Cambridge, and Lincoln college in Oxford; and ſeven hoſpitals or almſhouſes.

K. Henry 7. founded ſome few houſes of Obſervant friers, and began a noble hoſpital at the Savoy, London, his worthy mother founded Chriſt's and St. John's colleges in Cambridge; and others founded, in his reign, three hoſpitals, and one ſmall college.

Within a few years after king Henry 8. came to the throne, Braſen Noſe and Corpus Chriſti colleges were founded in Oxford, and Magdalene college in Cambridge; and there were alſo five hoſpitals founded before that deluge aroſe, which at once ſwept away what the miſtaken zeal and piety of many ages had raiſed.

From this long (and I am afraid tedious) account of the riſe and progreſs of monaſtic affairs, give me leave to obſerve, that the greateſt and richeſt monaſteries, Weſtminſter, Glaſtonbury, St. Alban's, Chriſt Church, and St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, Abindon, Shafteſbury, Peterborough, Ramſey, Croyland, Taviſtoke, Bury St. Edmund's, etc. were founded before the Conqueſt[g].

[g] There were about one hundred monaſteries at the Conqueſt; ſeveral of them very rich (there being nothing given to Glaſtonbury after A. D. 1030. tho' many things taken away, as Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 9. a.) but ſeveral of them poor and mean, and ſome of theſe being rebuilt and plentifully endowed, and having Religious of a different order put into them after the Conqueſt, I reckon thoſe amongſt the four hundred and ſeventy ſix founded or refounded after the Conqueſt.

Within

Within an hundred and fifty years after the Conqueſt, or before the firſt year of K. Henry 3. there were founded and refounded four hundred ſeventy ſix[a] abbies and priories, beſides eighty one alien priories[b].

After that time, there were many chantries, houſes of friers, hoſpitals, and colleges founded, but very few houſes of monks, nuns, or canons; I think but one Benedictine houſe, viz. that of Holand[c] in Lancaſhire, after the death of K. Henry 3. and after the death of K. Edward 3. (which was about an hundred and ſixty years before the diſſolution) no monaſtery for monks, or nuns, or canons, except Sion, and five Chartreuſe houſes. So that the nation in general ſeem'd to have quite loſt its taſte for theſe kind of inſtitutions a great while before the ſubverſion of them.

II. The orders of perſons treated of in this book were either Religious or Military. Of the former were all monks, nuns, and canons. Of the monks, the moſt ancient are,

The Benedictines, or thoſe that follow the rule of St. Benedict, who was born at Nurſia in the dukedom of Spoletto in Italy, about A. D. 480[d]. and died about A. D. 543[e]. He founded twelve monaſteries in his own country, the chief whereof was at Monte Caſſino; but his rule ſeems not to have been confirm'd till fifty two years after his death, when pope Gregory the Great gave a ſanction to it.

The habit[f] of theſe monks was a black looſe coat or a gown of ſtuff reaching down to their heels, with a cowl or hood of the ſame, and a ſcapulary; and under that, another white habit as large as the former made of flannel, and boots on their legs[g]; and from the colour of their outward habit they are generally called Black monks.

This order is ſaid by many[h] to have been brought into England by St. Auſtin the monk and his brethren A. D. 596. and to have continued from thence to the diſſolution under ſeveral improvements: But others think[i] this rule was but little known here till king Edgar's time, and never perfectly obſerved till after the Conqueſt. Some[k] have ſaid, that St. Wilfrid brought it into England A. D. 666. and others[l], with greater probability, that he improved the Engliſh church by it. It is expreſsly mentioned in K. Kenred's charter[m] to the monks of Eveſham, A. D. 709. and in the bull of pope Conſtantine[n] granted in the ſame year to that monaſtery. But Bede, who hath given us a very accurate account of the ſtate of religion in this iſland till A. D. 731. hath nothing of it. Nor is there any mention of it in the firſt regulation of the monks in England by archbiſhop Cuthbert in the great ſynod at Cloveſhoe[a] A. D. 747. If Wilfrid really advanced this rule, it was not over all England, but in Kent only[b]. And if the charter of king Kenred, and the bull of pope Conſtantine be genuine (for all the ancient grants produced by the monks are not ſo[c]) this rule, which is there preſcribed to the monks of Eveſham, is however ſaid in the bull to "have been at that "time but little uſed in thoſe parts[d]." So that, inſtead of the Saxon monks being all Benedictines, there were probably but few ſuch till the reſtoration of monaſteries under king Edgar[e], when St. Dunſtan and St. Oſwald (who had been a Benedictine monk[f] at Fleury in France) not only favoured the monks againſt the Secular clergy, but ſo much advanced the Benedictines, that William of Malmſbury[g] ſaith, "This order "took its riſe here in England from St. Oſwald."

[a] There were ſeveral monaſteries founded, which did not laſt till the general diſſolution by K. Hen. 8. Some have attributed the great number of monaſteries, founded in this period, to the ignorance of the age, as Popiſh Tracts, tit. i. p. 283, 284. others to the belief of Purgatory, and mens opinion of the wonderful prevalency of the Saints interceſſion with God, as Burnet, Reform. vol. i. p. 188. others to the natural love of the Normans towards building churches and monaſteries, which they are much praiſed for by the monkiſh writers. See Will. Malmſbury's Hiſt. book iii. p. 57. And Dr. Inet, in his Church Hiſt. p. ii. p. 220. thinks it owing to the holy wars. "Some men, ſaith he, who had made raſh "vows of going to the Holy Land, and had a mind "to break them, were taught to commute with the "building of monaſteries. Others, who were going "thither, being uncertain of their return to their "eſtates, profuſely gave them away to build or en"rich monaſteries. Others in memory of the delive"rances from the hazards that war had expos'd them "to, or in commemoration of their relations and "friends, who had periſhed therein, followed their ex"ample. And within one hundred years after A. D. "1092. when the holy war was agreed upon in the "council of Clermont, there were above three hun"dred Religious houſes founded and endowed in this "kingdom." But quaere, for there ſeems to me to have been no cruſade in England 'till after the loſs of Jeruſalem, which in Echard's Hiſt. of England is placed about A. D. 1188.

[b] I am not ſatisfied of any alien priories being founded after the reign of K. Edward 1. and think the whole Number of them was ninety ſix, there being fifteen founded after king Henry 3. began his reign.

[c] And this was not a new foundation, but a college or chantry of Secular prieſts changed into a Benedictine priory.

Of this order were all our cathedral priories, except Carliſle, and moſt of the richeſt[h] abbies in England.

There were nuns of this order as well as monks: But the time and original of their inſtitution is uncertain[i]. Their habit was a black robe, with a ſcapulary of the ſame, and under that robe a tunic of white or undyed wool. When they went to the choir, they had over all a black cowl like that of the monks[k].

The reformation of ſome things, which ſeemed too remiſs in St. Benedict's rule, begun by Bernon abbat of Gigni[l] in Burgundy, but increaſed and perfected by Odo abbat of Cluni about A. D. 912. gave occaſion to the riſe of the Cluniac order; which was the firſt and principal branch of the Benedictines. For they lived under the rule of St. Benedict, and wore a black habit, but obſerving a different diſcipline, were called by a different name[m].

William earl Warren, ſon-in-law to king William the Conqueror firſt brought theſe monks into England, and built their firſt houſe at Lewes in Suſſex about A. D. 1077[n].

All the monaſteries of this order in England were governed by foreigners[o], had more French[o] than Engliſh monks in them, and were not only ſubject to the foreign houſes of Cluni, La Charité ſur Loire, St. Martins des Champs at Paris, but could be viſited by them only[o]. None of their priors were elected by their convents[o], but named by the above mentioned foreign houſes. They could not receive the profeſſion of their novices in England[o], nor could ſo much as any of their differences be determined here, but they were obliged in almoſt all caſes to go to their ſuperiors beyond ſea; by which means the greateſt part of their revenues were carried to thoſe foreign houſes[p]. And upon that account, during the wars with France, the priories of this order were generally ſeiſed into the king's hands as alien priories. But after the petition to the parliament at Wincheſter, 4 Ed. 3. theſe inconveniencies were by degrees removed: Some of their houſes were in that and the following reign made denizen[a]; Bermondſey was made an abby[b]; and all of them at laſt diſcharged from all manner of ſubjection and obedience to the foreign abbies[c].

There were twenty ſeven priories and cells of this order in England.

The order of Grandmont was inſtituted at Grandmont in Limoſin in France about A. D. 1076. by Stephen[d] a gentleman of Auvergne; the monks of it lived under the rule of St. Benedict, with ſome little variation. They were brought into England in the reign of K. Henry 1[e]. and ſeated at Abberbury in Shropſhire; beſides which, I find but two houſes of this order in England, viz. Creſſewel in Herefordſhire, and Groſmont or Eſkedale in Yorkſhire.

The Carthuſian monks were alſo a branch of the Benedictines, whoſe rule, with the addition of a great many auſterities, they follow. Their author was one Bruno born at Cologne in Germany, who firſt inſtituted this order at Chartreux in the dioceſe of Grenoble in France about A. D. 1080[f]. Their rule, which was confirmed by pope Alexander 3 about A. D. 1174. is the moſt ſtrict of any of the Religious orders; for they never eat fleſh, and are obliged to faſt on bread, water, and ſalt one day in every week. They always wear an hair ſhirt next their ſkins, and are only allowed to walk about their own grounds, once in a week; for none of them are ever permitted to go out of the bounds of their monaſteries (which inſtead of Chartreuſe Houſes are corruptly called Charter Houſes) except their priors and procurators, and they only upon the neceſſary affairs of their houſes.

They were brought into England A. D. 1180[g] or 1181[h]. by king Henry 2. and had their firſt houſe at Witham in Somerſetſhire.

Their habit was all white, except their outward plaited cloak, which was black[i].

There was no nunnery[k], and but nine houſes of monks of this order in England.

There was yet another branch of Benedictines[l] called Ciſtertians from Ciſtertium or Ciſteaux in the biſhopric of Chalons in Burgundy, where this order was begun, A. D. 1098[m]. by Robert late abbat of Moleſme in that province; but brought into repute by Stephen Harding an Engliſhman[n], third abbat of Ciſteaux, who is therefore reckoned the principal founder[n]. They were alſo called Bernardines from St. Bernard, who was abbat of Clairvaux or Clareval in the dioceſe of Langres about A. D. 1116. and a great promoter of this order[o]; and White monks[p], from the colour of their habit, which was a white caſſock with a narrow ſcapulary, and over that a black gown when they went abroad, but a white one, when they went to church[l].

Their monaſteries, which became very numerous in a ſhort time[q], were generally founded in ſolitary and uncultivated places[r], and all dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin.

These monks came into England, as was before obſerved, A. D. 1128. had their

firſt houſe at Waverley[a] in Surrey; and before the diſſolution had eighty five houſes here.

THE order of Savigni or Fratres Griſei is ſaid by ſome[b] to have been founded before the Conqueſt of England, but was not really in being till about forty years after. The author, Vitalis, was born about the middle of the eleventh century at Tierceville three leagues from Bayeux, and being made prebendary of the collegiate church of Mortain, obtain'd the name of Vitalis de Mortain[c]. He was a companion of Robert de Arbriſſel founder of the order of Fontevrauld, began to gather diſciples in the foreſt of Savigni about A. D. 1105. and by the encouragement of a nobleman named Raoul de Fugeres founded an abby there A. D. 1112[d]. He gave his diſciples the rule of St. Benedict[e] with ſome peculiar conſtitutions[f], and they took a grey habit[g]; from whence they were frequently called Fratres Griſei. Vitalis came into England A. D. 1120[h]. and preaching here, and converting many, probably introduced his order; which was ſhortly after, viz. A. D. 1148. united to the Ciſtertians[i].

THE order of Tiron was inſtituted by St. Bernard[k], who was born in the territory of Abbeville in the province of Ponthieu A. D. 1046[l]. and became a diſciple of the before mentioned Robert d'Arbriſſel, yet ſet up a different ſort of monks, who took their name of Tironenſes[m] from their firſt monaſtery, which was founded at Tiron about A. D. 1109[n]. They were reformed Benedictines[o], whoſe habit was at firſt a light grey[p], which was afterwards changed into black. I find no houſe of this order in England, and only one abby in Wales, viz. St. Dogmael's, (where they were placed about A. D. 1126.) with its dependent priory at Pille, and cell at Caldey.

THE orders of monks before mentioned were all[q] we had in England and Wales, except the Culdees[r], or Cultores Dei, who were Scotch monks, and of the ſame rule with the Iriſh ones. The Scotch writers make them as antient as the converſion of their nation to Chriſtianity in the times of the emperors Decius and Aurelian. But they are not mentioned by Nennius, who wrote in the ſeventh century, or Bede, who wrote in the eighth; and the firſt mention we have of them is at St. Andrew's, about the middle of the ninth century[s]. I meet with theſe no where in England but at St. Peter's in York.

THE canons were either Religious or Secular; the Secular[t] canons were clergymen, called Secular, becauſe they were converſant in the world [a], performed ſpiritual offices to the laity, and took upon them the care of ſouls, which the Regulars could not do without diſpenſation. They differed in nothing almoſt from ordinary prieſts, ſave that they were under the government of ſome local ſtatutes: For tho' they were in ſome places confined to live under one roof, as the monks and Regular canons did, yet they generally lived apart [b], and were maintained by diſtinct prebends, almoſt in the ſame manner with the canons and prebendaries of our cathedral and collegiate churches at this day [a].

But ſome diſtinction was probably kept up for ſome time; for the monks of Nethe are called monks of Savigni in king John's charter, A. D. 1208. as Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 719. And A. D. 1264. the abbat of Savigni writes to the abbats of Furnes and Byland "ac univerſis generationis Savigniacenſis coabbatibus per Angliam et Walliam conſtitutis." Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 700. But about A. D. 1330. the Ciſtertians took it ill to be called or thought Fratres Griſei, and ſaid, "hiis diebus pauci vel nulli vix inveniuntur de ordine Griſeorum." Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 923.

In the antient catalogue of Religious houſes, publiſhed in Stevens, vol. i. p. 38. the monks of Tyron at St. Dogmael's are called "Monachi Albi," whereas thoſe of Savigni were "Monachi Griſei." And theſe probably were the "Monachi Albi alius profeſſionis quam Bernardini," mentioned by Leland, Collect. vol. iii. p. 13.

[t] In the preface to the Monaſticon, the name Secular canons is ſaid to be a contradiction.

REGULAR canons were ſuch as lived under ſome rule; they were a leſs ſtrict ſort of Religious than the monks [c], but lived together under one roof, had a common dormitory and refectory, and were obliged to obſerve the ſtatutes of their order [d].

THE chief rule for theſe canons is that of St. Auſtin, who was made biſhop of Hippo A. D. 395. But they were but little known till the tenth or eleventh century, were not brought into England till after the Conqueſt, and ſeem not to have obtain'd the name of Auſtin canons till ſome years after. Bale [e] indeed and Sr. Robert Atkins [f] ſay, that theſe canons were brought into England by St. Birinus in the beginning of the ſeventh century [g]: But thoſe were certainly Secular canons whom he then placed at Dorcheſter. And all other hiſtorians agree that we had no Regular canons here till the eleventh, and probably not till the twelfth century. For tho' they differ about the place of their firſt ſettlement, yet the general opinion is, that they came in after K. Henry 1. began his reign. Joſ. Pamphilus [h] indeed ſaith that they were ſeated in London, A. D. 1059. but he ſeems to have been but an obſcure writer. Mr. Somner [i] ſaith, that St. Gregory's in Canterbury, which was built by archbiſhop Lanfranc A.D. 1084. was their firſt houſe; but Leland's ſaying [k], that archbiſhop Lanfranc placed Secular canons at St. Gregory's, and that archbiſhop Corboil changed them into Regulars, makes the authority of that judicious antiquary in this caſe doubtful. Reyner [l] ſaith, that they were brought into England by Athelwulphus or Adulphus confeſſor to K. Henry 1. and had their firſt houſe at Noſtell in Yorkſhire; but they ſeem not to have been ſettled there 'till Thurſtan [m] was archbiſhop of York, and that was not 'till A. D. 1114 [n]. Stow ſaith [o] that Norman was the firſt canon Regular in England, and that theſe Religious were firſt ſeated at the Holy Trinity or Chriſt Church within Aldgate, London, A. D. 1108. but that houſe was not built till R. Beaumeis [p] was biſhop of London; whereas the houſe of theſe canons at Colcheſter was founded before the death of biſhop Maurice [q] his predeceſſor, which happened Sept. 26 [r]. 1107. And therefore I can't but think that John Roſſe [s] and pope Paſchalis 2 [t]. are right in placing them firſt at Colcheſter, tho' it could not be in Roſſe's year 1109. but was rather A. D. 1105[a].

MR. STEVENS[b] tells us, that tho' there were Regular canons who embraced the rule of St. Auſtin taken from his one hundred and ninth epiſtle, in the eleventh century (as particularly at the abby of St. Denis at Rheims about A. D. 1067.) yet the Regular canons did not make ſolemn vows till the twelfth century; and did not in general take the name of "Regular canons of St. Auſtin" till pope Innocent 2. ordained in the Lateran council A. D. 1139. that all Regular canons ſhould ſubmit to that rule of St. Auſtin in his one hundred and ninth epiſtle. So that theſe Regular canons certainly fall ſhort of the time of their pretended founder, and therefore when Black or Regular canons are mentioned before A. D. 1105. the reader muſt thereby underſtand Secular canons. For it was uſual in thoſe days to call the Secular canons of cathedral and collegiate churches "Canonici Regulares" to diſtinguiſh them from the common parochial clergy, tho' probably many of thoſe ſocieties might become Auſtin canons afterwards.

THEIR habit was a long black caſſoc, with a white rochet over it, and over that a black cloak and hood[c]. The monks were always ſhaved, but theſe canons wore beards, and caps on their heads.

I FIND above one hundred ſeventy five houſes of theſe canons and canoneſſes in England and Wales.

BUT beſides the common and general ſort of theſe canons, there were alſo the following particular ſorts, viz.

FIRST, Such as obſerved St. Auſtin's rule according to the regulations of St. Nicolas of Arroaſia[d], as thoſe of Harewolde[e] in Bedfordſhire, Nutley or Crendon[f] in Buckinghamſhire, Hertland[g] in Devonſhire, Brunne[h] in Lincolnſhire, and Lilleſhul[i] in Shropſhire.

SECONDLY, Some of the rule of St. Auſtin, and the order of St. Victor; as at Keynſham[k] and Worſpring[l] in Somerſetſhire, and Wormeſley[m] in Herefordſhire.

THIRDLY, Of the order of St. Auſtin, and the inſtitution of St. Mary of Meretune; as at Buckenham[n] in Norfolk.

FOURTHLY, Premonſtratenſians, or canons who lived according to the rule of St. Auſtin, reformed by St. Norbert[o] afterwards archbiſhop of Magdeburgh, who ſet up this Regulation about A. D. 1120[o]. at Premonſtratum, in the dioceſe of Laon in Picardy, a place ſo called becauſe pointed out, as 'twas ſaid, by the bleſſed Virgin to be the head of this reformed order[o]. Theſe canons were alſo called White[p] canons from their habit, which was a white caſſoc with a rochet over it, a long white cloak and white caps[q]. They were brought into England ſhortly after A. D. 1140[r]. and ſettled firſt at Newhouſe in Lincolnſhire[r]. They had in England a conſervator of their privileges[s], but were nevertheleſs often viſited by their ſuperiors at Premonſtre, who raiſed great contributions out of them[t], as the generals or foreign heads of the Cluniacs and Ciſtertians[a] alſo did, 'till reſtrained from it by the parliament at Carliſle, ult. Ed. 1. or A. D. 1307[b]. This ſtatute did not reſtrain the foreign heads from viſiting their charge in England, governing their monks, or exerciſing the diſcipline of their order, provided they carried no money away with them. So that the Religious of this order in England continued under the juriſdiction of the abbat of Premonſtre and the general chapter of the order 'till A. D. 1512. when they were exempted from it by the bull of pope Julius 2. confirmed by K. Henry 8. and the ſuperiority of all the houſes of this order in England and Wales was given to the abbat of Welbeck in Nottinghamſhire[c].

There were about thirty five houſes of this order.

The Sempringham[d] or Gilbertine canons were inſtituted by St. Gilbert at Sempringham in Lincolnſhire A. D. 1148[e]. and confirmed by pope Eugenius 3[f]. This devout man compoſed his rule out of thoſe of St. Auſtin and St. Benedict (the women following the Ciſtertian regulation of St. Benedict's rule, and the men the rule of St. Auſtin[g]) with ſome ſpecial ſtatutes of his own. The habit of theſe canons, as deſcribed in the Monaſticon[h], is a black caſſoc with a white cloak over it, and an hood lined with lambs ſkins. But others will have it to have been the ſame with that of the Ciſtertians[i]. This order (over which there was a maſter or prior general[k], who frequently viſited them[l], and had ſo much authority that the particular priors and convents could do but little without him[m]) conſiſted both of men and women[n], who lived in the ſame houſes, but in ſuch different apartments that they had no communication with each other[o], and increaſed ſo faſt that St. Gilbert himſelf founded thirteen[p] monaſteries of it, viz. four for men alone, and nine for men and women together, which had in them ſeven hundred brethren and fifteen hundred ſiſters. At the diſſolution there were about twenty five houſes of this order in England and Wales.

Canons Regular of the Holy Sepulchre were inſtituted in the beginning of the twelfth century, in imitation of the Regulars inſtituted in the church of the Holy Sepulchre of our Saviour at Jeruſalem. The firſt houſe they had in England was at Warwick[q], which was begun for them by Henry de Newburgh earl of Warwick[r], who died A. D. 1123[s]. and perfected by his ſon Roger before A. D. 1135[t]. They are ſometimes called Canons of the Holy Croſs[u], and wore the ſame habit with other Auſtin canons, diſtinguiſhed only by a double red croſs upon the breaſt of their cloak or upper garment[x]. The endeavours of theſe Religious for regaining the Holy Land, coming to nothing after the loſs of Jeruſalem A. D. 1188. this order fell into decay, their revenues and privileges were moſtly given to the Maturine friers[x], and but two houſes of them continued to the diſſolution.

There

There were alſo, beſides the Benedictines and Gilbertines before mentioned, Cluniac, Ciſtertian, Carthuſian, Auſtin, and Premonſtratenſian nuns, who followed the ſame rules with their reſpective monks, omitting only what was not proper for their ſex, and wore habits of the ſame colour, having their heads always covered with a veil.

And to theſe we muſt add three other orders of Religious women formerly in England, viz.

First, Nuns of the order of Fontevrault, which was inſtituted about the latter end of the eleventh century [a] by one Robert ſurnamed de Arbriſſel [b] at Fontevrault in Poictiers, where he built an abby for his followers preſently after A. D. 1100 [c]. Tho' this order (which was a reformation of the Benedictine [d]) was chiefly for women, yet beyond ſea they had alſo Religious men [e] living amongſt them in different apartments, who were under the government of the abbeſs; for the founder grounded his model upon our Bleſſed Savior's recommending the Virgin Mary and St. John the Evangeliſt to each other [f]: And as St. John was thereby to look upon the Bleſſed Virgin as his mother, the founder directed that the men ſhould acknowlege the abbeſs or prioreſs of every convent as their ſuperior, and ſubmit to her authority both in ſpirituals and temporals. And the abbeſs of Fontevrault was made the general ſuperioreſs and head of the order [g].

These nuns were brought into England by Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter [h] before A. D. 1161. and placed at Nun Eaton in Warwickſhire; but there were only two houſes [i] more of this order in England, and there is no expreſs account of any monk in any of them, but only of a prior at Nun Eaton [k]. Their habit was a kind of tunic or caſſoc of the natural colour of the wool, and over that a large black garment [l].

Secondly, Nuns of the order of St. Clare, who inſtituted it at Aſſiſe in Italy about A. D. 1212 [m]. It was confirmed by pope Innocent 3. A. D. . . and by pope Honorius 3. A. D. 1223 [m]. and was afterwards divided into a ſtricter and looſer ſort [m]. St. Clare was born in the ſame town, and lived at the ſame time with St. Francis [n], and her nuns obſerving St. Francis's rule, and wearing the ſame coloured habit [o] with the Franciſcan friers [n], were often called Minoreſſes [p]; and their houſe without Aldgate The Minories. They were likewiſe called The Poor Clares, probably from their ſcanty endowments [n].

They were brought into England by Blanch queen of Navarre [q], who was wife to Edmund earl of Lancaſter, Leiceſter, and Derby, about A. D. 1293. and ſeated without Aldgate, London. Beſides which, I find but three houſes more of this order in England, viz. Waterbeache and Denny in Cambridgeſhire, and Bruſyard in Suffolk.

Thirdly, Brigittines, or nuns of Our Holy Savior [r], who were inſtituted by St. Bridget, princeſs or ducheſs of Nericia [s] in Sweden, about the middle of the fourteenth century [t], under the rule of St. Auſtin, with ſome additions of her own [u]. This order, tho' chiefly for women, had likewiſe men in every convent (who lived in different apartments, and were not permitted to come near the women, but in caſes of great neceſſity [x]) and differed from all other inſtitutions in requiring a particular number [y] of men and women in every houſe, viz, ſixty nuns, thirteen prieſts, four dea-

The nuns had on their veils five ſmall pieces of red cloth to repreſent the five wounds of our Saviour. The prieſts had a red croſs on their breaſts with a round white piece in the middle of it to repreſent the hoſt, the deacons had a white circle with four ſmall pieces of red cloth to repreſent tongues; and the laymen had a white croſs with five red pieces to repreſent the five wounds.

I FIND but one houſe of this order in England, viz. that at Syon in Middleſex, founded by king Henry 5. about A. D. 1414.

THE before mentioned were all the ſorts of monks, canons, and nuns we had in England and Wales.

As to the friers, there were,

FIRST, The Dominicans, whoſe founder was St. Dominic a Spaniard, born at Calagueraga a ſmall town in the dioceſe of Oſma in Old Caſtile about A. D. 1070[c]. They were called Dominicans, from their founder; Preaching friers, from their office to preach and convert heretics[d]; Black friers, from their garments; and in France, Jacobines, from having their firſt houſe in St. James's ſtreet at Paris. Their rule, which was chiefly that of St. Auguſtine, was approved of by pope Innocent 3. in the Lateran council A. D. 1215. by word of mouth, and by the bull of pope Honorius 3. A. D. 1216. At firſt they uſed the ſame habit with the Auſtin canons. But about A. D. 1219. they took another, viz. a white caſſock with a white hood over it, and when they go abroad, a black cloak with a black hood over their white veſtments[e]. They came into England A. D. 1221[f]. had their firſt houſe at Oxford[f] that year, and at the diſſolution had about forty three houſes here.

THERE were nuns alſo of this order, but I think none in England. For, though Thomas lord Wake intended to have brought ſome of them hither, and had the king's licence for it, yet he ſeems not to have done it.

ST. FRANCIS, who was contemporary with St. Dominic, but of another country, being born at Aſſiſe in Italy in the province of Umbria, and duchy of Spoletum[g], A. D. 1182. was founder of the Franciſcan, Grey, or Minor friers. The firſt name they had from their founder; the ſecond, from their grey cloathing; and the third they took out of pretended humility. Their rule was drawn up by St. Francis A. D. 1209. approved of by pope Innocent 3. A. D. 1210[h]. and by the general Lateran Council A. D. 1215[h]. Their habit was a looſe garment of a grey colour, reaching down to their ankles, with a cowl of the ſame, and a cloak over it, when they went abroad. They girded themſelves with cords, and went bare-footed[i]. Davenport ſaith, they came into England A. D. 1219[k]. But the general opinion is, that they came hither A. D. 1224[l]. and had their firſt houſe at Canterbury, and their ſecond at London.

SOME conſiderable relaxation having by degrees crept into this order, it was thought requiſite to reform it, and to reduce it, as near as might be, to its firſt rule and inſtitution[m]. Whereupon ſuch as continued under the relaxation were called Conventuals, and ſuch as accepted the reformation were called Obſervants or Recollects[n]. This reformation was begun about A. D. 1400. by St. Bernard[a] or Bernardin of Siena, confirmed by the council of Conſtance A. D. 1414. and afterwards by Eugenius 4. and other popes. King Edward 4. is commonly ſaid[b] to have brought them into England, but I find no certain account of their being here till king Henry 7. built two[c] or three houſes for them[c]. At the diſſolution, the conventual Franciſcans had about fifty five houſes, which were under ſeven cuſtodies or wardenſhips, viz. thoſe of London, York, Cambridge, Briſtol, Oxford, Newcaſtle, and Worceſter[d].

As to the Capuchins, and other diſtinctions of the Franciſcans beyond the ſeas, they chiefly aroſe ſince the Engliſh Reformation, and never had any place here.

The Trinitarians, Maturines, or Friers of the order of the Holy Trinity for the redemption of captives, were inſtituted by St. John de Matha, and Felix de Valois[e] in France about A. D. 1197[f]. Their rule was that of St. Auſtin, with ſome peculiar conſtitutions[f]; their order was confirmed by pope Innocent 3. who gave them white robes, with a red and blue croſs on their breaſts; and appointed that all their revenues ſhould be divided into three parts, viz. one for their own ſupport and maintenance, another to relieve the poor, and a third to redeem ſuch Chriſtians as were or ſhould be taken captives by the infidels[g]. They were called Trinitarians, becauſe all their churches were to be dedicated to the Holy Trinity[g]; and Maturines, from having their firſt houſe in Paris near St. Mathurine's chapel[h]. They were brought, A. D. 1224[i]. into England (where the lands, revenues, and privileges of the canons of the H. Sepulchre were given them upon the decay of that order[k]) and had their firſt houſe at Mottenden in Kent: Some ſay, that their head houſe was at Ingham in Norfolk as long as that houſe was of this order, and that from thence they were then called, Of the order of Ingham. I find about ten or twelve houſes of theſe friers in England and Wales[l].

Friers Robertines inſtituted by Robert Flower the devout hermit of Knareſburgh, who lived in K. John's[m] reign, are ſpoken of by Leland[n] as a branch of the Trinitarians; but I have hitherto met with ſo little concerning theſe Robertines, that I can ſay nothing certain of them, and doubt whether there really was any ſuch order[o].

The Carmelite or White friers (the former of which names they had from the place of their firſt reſidence, and the latter from the colour of their habit) came next into this kingdom; they were alſo called Brethren or Friers of the Bleſſed Virgin, and pretended to great antiquity; but the firſt certain account we have of them is at Mount Carmel in Paleſtine, from whence they were driven by the hard uſage of the Saracens about A. D. 1238[p]. Their rule (which is chiefly that of St. Baſil) is ſaid to have been given them by Albert patriarch of Jeruſalem about A. D. 1205[q]. and to have been confirmed by pope Honorius 3. A. D. 1224[a]. They were brought into England, A. D. 1240[b]. by the lords John Veſcy and Richard Grey, and had their firſt houſes at Alnewick in Northumberland and Ailesford in Kent; at the latter of which places theſe friers held their firſt European chapter A. D. 1245[c]. Their garments are ſaid to have been at firſt white[d], but being obliged by the infidels[d] to make them party coloured, they continued the uſe of ſuch for fifty years after their coming into England, and about A. D. 1290[e]. made them white again. Of this order we had about forty houſes in England and Wales.

Angl. vol. ii. p. 833.) to have lived as an hermit only at Knareſburgh (as Ivo ſeems alſo to have done after him) and if he got any aſſociates they were probably Hermites only; and their being called Trinitarians ſeems to have been occaſioned by that ſort of friers being placed there by the earl of Cornwal many years after his death; for Robert muſt have been dead before 12 Hen. 3. or A. D. 1227. when the grant in Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 833. was made to Ivo: And Richard earl of Cornwal had not the grant of Knareſburgh 'till A. D. 1234. as Dugd. Baron. vol. i. p. 762. and did not place the Trinitarians there 'till about A. D. 1257. for his grant to them bears that date, Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 834. Weaver, p. 142. ſaith, Robert's order was inſtituted and confirmed about A. D. 1137. but that was ſo long before king John's reign, when Robert floriſh'd, that the year, at leaſt, muſt be falſely printed.

The order of Croſſed or Crouched friers was inſtituted, or at leaſt reformed, by one Gerrard prior of St. Mary of Morello at Bologna; and confirmed, A. D. 1169. by pope Alexander 3. who brought them under St. Auſtin's rule, and made ſome other conſtitutions for their government[f]. They came into England A. D. 1244[g]. and had their firſt houſe at Colcheſter[h]. At firſt they carried a croſs fixed to a ſtaff in their hands; but afterwards had a croſs of red cloth upon their backs or breaſts. Their habit was appointed by pope Pius 2. to be of a blue colour[i]. We had not here above ſix or ſeven houſes of theſe friers.

The original of the Auſtin friers, or Friers Eremites of the order of St. Auſtin, is very uncertain. They were brought into England about the year 1250[k]. and for their habit, had a white garment and ſcapulary, when they were in the houſe; but in the choir, and when they went abroad, they had over the former a ſort of coul[l] and a large hood, both black, which were girt with a black leather thong. They had about thirty two houſes in England and Wales at the ſuppreſſion.

The friers of the Sac and the Bethlemite friers appeared in England both in the ſame year, viz. A. D. 1257[m]. I find no account of the original of either of them. The right ſtyle of the former was Friers of the Penance of Jeſus Chriſt[n]. But they were more commonly called Friers of the Sac, from their habit's being either ſhaped like a ſack or made of that coarſe cloth called ſackcloth. They ſeem to have had their firſt houſe near Alderſgate, London[o]. But their order was very ſhort lived here, being put down by the council at Lyons A. D. 1307[p].

The Bethlemite friers had their rule and habit much like that of the Dominicans, but were diſtinguiſhed from them by a red ſtar of five rays, with a blue circle in the middle of it, worn on their breaſts[q] in memory of the ſtar, which appeared to the wiſe men, and conducted them to Bethlehem[r]. They were placed in Trumpington ſtreet at Cambridge the firſt year they came over[r]; and that ſeems to have been the only houſe of theſe friers in England[s].

[s] Stevens, vol. ii. p. 274. reckons St. Mary Bethlehem London; but that was founded eleven years before this order came into England.

The order of St. Anthony of Vienna was inſtituted A. D. 1095. for the help and relief of ſuch perſons as were afflicted with that painſul inflammation called St. Anthony's fire, from that ſaint's being thought to eaſe people under it, and deliver them from it [a]. The friers or brethren of this order followed St. Auſtin's rule, wore a black habit, with the letter T of a blue colour on their breaſts, came hither early in the reign of king Henry 3. and had one houſe at London and another at Hereford.

Of the friers De pica, who had an houſe at Norwich, I have met with nothing but what the author there ſaith of them, unleſs they were the "Freres pies," a ſort of Religious that wore black and white garments, mentioned by Walſingham, p. 124 [b].

The laſt order of friers, which were brought into this kingdom, was that of Bonhommes or Good men, who were brought hither by Edmund earl of Cornwall, A. D. 1283 [c]. and placed at Aſherug in Bucks. Beſides which, I find but one houſe more of this order in England, viz. Edingdon in Wiltſhire [d]. Theſe friers followed the rule of St. Auſtin [e], and wore a blue habit [f]. The ſuperiors of their houſes were called Rectors, and one of them was ſtyled preſident of the order [g].

Of the military orders of the Religious there were but two in England, viz. Knights Hoſpitalars [h], and Knights Templars.

The firſt of theſe orders began and took its name from an hoſpital built at Jeruſalem for the uſe of pilgrims coming to the Holy Land, and dedicated to St. John Baptiſt. For the firſt buſineſs of theſe knights was to provide for ſuch pilgrims at that hoſpital, and to protect them from injuries and inſults upon the road [i]. They were inſtituted about A. D. 1092 [k]. and were very much favour'd by Godfrey of Bulloigne, and his ſucceſſor Baldwin king of Jeruſalem. They followed chiefly St. Auſtin's rule, and wore a black habit with a white croſs upon it. They ſoon came into England, and had an houſe built for them in London A. D. 1100 [l]. And from a poor and mean beginning, obtained ſo great wealth [m], honors and exemptions [n], that their ſuperior here in England was the firſt lay baron, and had a ſeat amongſt the lords in parliament, and ſome of their privileges were extended even to their tenants.

There were alſo ſiſters of this order, but we had only one houſe of them in England, viz. Buckland in Somerſetſhire.

The Knights Templars were inſtituted A. D. 1118 [o]. and were ſo called from having their firſt reſidence in ſome rooms adjoining to the temple at Jeruſalem [p]. Their buſineſs alſo was to guard the roads for the ſecurity of pilgrims in the Holy Land, and their rule, that of Canons regular of St. Auſtin; their habit was white, with a red croſs on their left ſhoulder. Their coming into England was probably pretty early in the reign of king Stephen [q], and their firſt ſeat in Holborne. They increaſed very faſt, and in a little time obtained very large poſſeſſions [r]. But in leſs than two hundred years, their wealth and power was thought too great, they were accuſed of horrid crimes, and thereupon every where impriſoned; their eſtates were ſeized; their order ſuppreſſed by pope Clement 5. A. D. 1309. and totally aboliſhed by the council of Vienna A. D. 1312[a]. The ſuperior of this order was ſtyled Maſter of the Temple, and was often ſummoned to parliament[b].

The order of St. Lazarus of Jeruſalem (of which we had a few houſes) ſeems to have been founded for the relief and ſupport of lepers and impotent perſons of the military orders[c].

III. Under the general name of Religious houſes in this work are comprehended, cathedral and collegiate churches, abbies, priories, colleges, hoſpitals, preceptories, and frieries.

Our cathedral churches (God be praiſed) are yet remaining, and there is no occaſion for me to ſay what is meant by them; but perhaps it may be proper to obſerve, that in the conventual cathedrals, the biſhop was in the place of an abbat, and had the principal ſtall on the right hand of the entrance into the choir; as he ſtill hath at Ely, and till lately had at Durham and Carliſle.

Collegiate churches and colleges conſiſted of a number of Secular canons living together under the government of a dean, warden, provoſt, or maſter; and having, for the more ſolemn performance of divine ſervice, chaplains, ſinging men, and choriſters belonging to them.

An abby was a ſociety of Religious people, having an abbat or abbeſs to preſide over them. And ſome of theſe were ſo conſiderable, that the abbats of them were called to parliament[d], and had ſeats and votes in the houſe of lords. They had the power and authority of biſhops within the limits of their ſeveral houſes[e], gave the ſolemn benediction, conferr'd the leſſer orders, wore mitres[f], ſandals, etc. and carried croſſes or paſtorals[f]

[d] The oracle of the law, ſaith, 2 Inſtit. p. 585. "Twenty ſix abbats and two priors had baronies, and "thereby were lords of parliament." In 1 Inſtit. 97. he ſaith, "There were an hundred and eighteen "monaſteries founded by kings of England, whereof "ſuch as held per baroniam, and were called to par"liament by writ, were lords of paliament, and had "places and voices there; but not if they were not "called by writ; for Feverſham was founded by "K. Stephen to hold by barony; but the abbat not "being called to parliament by writ, did not ſit "there." This is alſo in Weaver, p. 183. Cowel, ſub voce Mitred, ſaith, theſe abbats were not called to parliament becauſe they were mitred, but becauſe they receiv'd their temporals from the king. Collier, Eccl. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 164. ſaith, they held of the king in capite per baroniam; their endowment being at leaſt an entire barony, which conſiſted of thirteen knights fees, and thereby they were advanced to the ſtate and dignity of ſpiritual lords: But of the parliamentary abbies, ſome were founded by ſubjects, ſome by kings of Mercia, etc. and about eight only by kings of England. The abbat of Thorney pleaded, A. D. 1338. that he did not hold by barony, but by frankalmoine Collect. Wren. vol. ii. p. 18. ex reg. Sim. epiſc. Elienſ. and yet was then called to parliament, as Fuller, book vi. p. 292. and Stevens's Append. p. 15. The prior of Coventry likewiſe pleaded, 14 Ric. 2. that he did not hold per baroniam, as Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 305. The abby of Bardney was valued at no more than 429*l.* 7*s.* 0*d.* per ann. in the whole, and 366*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* clear; and there were ſeveral abbies and priories which had much greater temporals, and conſequently were entire baronies, which were not parliamentary. 'Tis poſſible theſe laſt might not receive their temporals from the crown, nor hold them in capite, and Bardney might; but I rather think this privilege was chiefly owing to the favour of the king, who might in other caſes as well as that of Taviſtocke, call an houſe of the foundation of his anceſtors, which was not really ſo. Fuller's Ch. Hiſt. book vi. p. 293. All the parliamentary abbats and priors had houſes in Weſtminſter, London, or Southwark to live in whilſt the parliament ſate.

[e] See the grant of a mitre to the abbat of Malmſbury, in Wilkins's Councils, vol. iii. p. 142, 143. "Abbas Samſon fecit novum ſigillum, quod cum mi"tra eſſet pingendum, licet predeceſſores ſui tale non "haberent; et primus inter abbates Angliae impe"travit, quod daret epiſcopalem benedictionem ſo"lemniter ubicunque fuerit." Joc. Brakeland in Chron. S. Edm. Bur. mſ. He was abbat from A. D. 1182 to 1211 or 1212. "Thomas de Merleberg "abbas Eveſham primo ſculpſit ſuper duas tumbas "praedeceſſorum ſuorum ad honorem et oſtenſionem "dignitatis eccleſiae imagines epiſcopales, et ſibi ipſi "cum eiſdem fecit mauſoleum et incidit in lapide "marmoreo ſuperpoſito imaginem epiſcopalem ad "honorem eccleſiae. Obiit A. D. 1236." We may hereby ſee when theſe practices began.

in their hands; and ſome of their houſes were exempted [a] from the juriſdiction, of both archbiſhop and biſhop, and ſubject to the pope only. Mr. Fuller [b] ſaith, that 49 Hen. 3. ſixty four abbats, and thirty ſix priors were called to parliament. But this number being too great, king Edward 3. reduced it to twenty five abbats and two priors [b], to whom were afterwards added two abbats [c]. So that there were twenty nine in all, and no more that ſtatedly and conſtantly [d] enjoy'd this privilege, viz. the abbat of Tewkeſbury, the prior of Coventry, the abbats of Waltham, Cirenceſter, St. John's at Colcheſter, Croiland, Shrewſbury, Selby, Bardney, St. Bennet's of Hulme, Thorney, Hide, Winchelcomb, Battel, Reading, St. Mary's in York, Ramſey, Peterburgh, St. Peter's in Glouceſter, Glaſtonbury, St. Edmund's Bury, St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, St. Alban's, Weſtminſter, Abingdon, Eveſham, Malmſbury, and Taviſtock; and the prior of St. John's of Jeruſalem, who was ſtyled "Primus Angliae baro [e];" but it was with reſpect to the lay barons only; for he was the laſt of the ſpiritual ones. I have here ſet down the firſt twenty four of theſe [f] in the order they went to parliament 3 Hen. 8 [f]. Mr. Hearne thinks [g] that they took place in the houſe of lords according to the ſeniority of their creation. But John Anſtis eſquire, garter king of arms, is of opinion [h], "That ſome of the abbats, like the biſhops, had by virtue of "their abbies a certain fixed precedency, and that others of them took place according "to the priority of their creation." Many have aſſigned the firſt place to the abbat of St. Alban's [i], becauſe St. Alban was the firſt martyr in this kingdom.

n. 13. But in the parliament houſe 15 Hen. 8. they are drawn with mitres on their heads, as Fiddes's Life of Wolſey, p. 303.

[a] Cowel, voce Abbat, ſaith, Such as were mitred, were exempted from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan, having themſelves epiſcopal authority within their limits; and Godolphin, in Repert. Eccl. hath almoſt the ſame words; but Reyner, tr. ii. p. 55. ſaith, that St. Alban's Weſtminſter, St. Auſtin's Canterbury, St. Edmunds Bury, and Eveſham only were exempt, except perhaps Glaſtonbury. It is more likely that ſeveral others of them obtain'd that privilege, as Burnet, Reformat. vol. i. p. 187. However, their exemption from their dioceſans, being honoured with the mitre, and called to parliament, certainly depended upon different grants; for the abbat of Malmſbury was one of the twenty five fixed upon for parliamentary abbats by K. Edward 3. as Fuller, book vi. p. 292. but he had not a grant of the epiſcopal ornaments and authority 'till 3 Ric. 2. tho' he was before that exempt from his dioceſan, as appears from the grant in Wilkins's Councils, vol. iii. p. 142. Peterborough alſo was allowed to be a parliamentary abby by king Edward 3. as Fuller, book vi. p. 292. but William Genge was, about 21 Ric. 2. the firſt mitred abbat; and both abbat and convent were viſited by the biſhop of Lincoln above eighty years afterwards, viz. in A. D. 1483. as Gunton's Peterborough, with Patrick's Supplement, p. 49. 323 and 328. The abbat of Taviſtock obtain'd the mitre 36 Hen. 6. but was not called to parliament 'till 5 Hen. 8. and was not exempted from the biſhop of the dioceſe 'till three years after, as Mr. Anſtis, in Append. to Fiddes's Life of Wolſey, p. 112. The prior of Durham had the uſe of the mitre and paſtoral ſtaff from about A. D. 1374. as Angl. Sacr. vol. i. p. 769. and Willis's Abbies, vol. i. p. 262. tho' never called to parliament; and in the regiſter of Oliv. King biſhop of Bath and Wells, there is a grant from pope Alexander 6. for the priors of Taunton (who were not parliamentary) having epiſcopal authority, and all the ornaments but the mitre, which I never met with another inſtance of, and therefore inſert an abſtract of the grant: "Alexander epiſcopus ſervus ſervorum Dei, dilecto "filio Joanni priori et conv. de Tanton, ſalutem; "ut tu et ſucceſſores tui annulo paſtorali, baculo, "almuciis, et aliis pontificialibus inſigniis (citra tamen mitram) uti; necnon in dicto monaſterio "et prioratibus et eccleſiis illi ſubjectis benedictionem "ſolennem poſt miſſarum, veſperarum, completorum, et divinorum officiorum ſolennia (dummodo "in benedictione hujuſmodi aliquis antiſtes aut apoſtolicae ſedis legatus praeſens non ſit) populo elargiri; canonicos quoque et chorales dicti monaſterii "ad minores ordines promovere; licite valeatis, dat. "4 Non. Maii A. D. 1499.

[c] Viz. the abbat of Taviſtoke and the abbat of Tewkſbury; the former obtain'd this privilege 5 Hen. 8. but when the latter obtained it, is uncertain; he doth not occur in any ſummons mentioned by Mr. Selden, Titles of Honor, p. 728. nor in Camden's liſt, in his Preface to the Britannia; and is ſaid by Reyner, vol. i. p. 212. not to have had a ſeat in parliament; but is in lord Herbert's and biſhop Godwin's catalogues, and certainly ſate in parliament in the reign of K. Henry 8. as Burnet, Reformat. vol. i. p. 268. and the proceſſion roll.

[d] The abbat of Leiceſter and the prior of St. James's near Northampton were ſometimes called after K. Edward 3. reduced the number, as Fuller, book vi. p. 293. and the abbat of Burton upon Trent ſate 28 Hen. 8. as Burnet, vol. i. p. 268. In Stevens's Append. p. 11. there is a liſt of all the abbats and priors that were called to parliament from 49 Hen. 3. to 23 Ed. 4.

D. 1154. Hiſt. of Abbies, vol. i. p. 13. See alſo Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 80. b. Fuller, book vi. p. 294. aſſigns the prior of St. John's the firſt place, the abbat of St. Alban's the ſecond, and to the reſt ſuch places as were appointed by the king.

A PRIORY was a ſociety of Religious, where the chief perſon was term'd a Prior or Prioreſs; and of theſe there were two ſorts.

FIRST, Where the prior was chief governor, as fully as any abbat in his abby, and was choſen by the convent; ſuch were the cathedral priors, and moſt of the Auſtin order.

SECONDLY, Where the priory was a cell, ſubordinate to ſome great abby, and the prior was placed and diſplaced at the will of the abbat. But there was a conſiderable difference between ſome of theſe cells. For ſome were altogether ſubject to their reſpective abbies, who ſent them what officers and monks they pleaſed, and took their revenues into the common ſtock of the abbies. But others conſiſted of a ſtated number of monks, who had a prior ſent them from the abby, and paid a penſion yearly as an acknowledgement of their ſubjection, but acted in other matters as an independent body, and had the reſt of their revenues for their own uſe. Theſe priories or cells were always of the ſame order with the abbies on whom they depended, tho' ſometimes of a different ſex[a], it being uſual after the Conqueſt for the great abbies to build nunneries in ſome of their manors, which ſhould be priories to them, and ſubject to their viſitation[b].

SOME of thoſe houſes, which were originally priories, were turned into abbies, as particularly Wymondham in Norfolk[c] and Walden in [d] in Eſſex. But this was looked upon as an injury to the patron[e], and ſometimes forbidden by the founder, as by the founder[f] of Cartmele in Lancaſhire: And I meet with one inſtance of an abby being reduced to a priory, becauſe the revenues of it could not ſupport the ſtate and dignity of an abbat[g], viz. Cumbwell in Kent.

PRIORIES alien were cells to foreign monaſteries: For when manors or tithes were given to foreign monaſteries[h], the monks, either to increaſe their own rule, or perhaps rather to have faithful ſtewards of their revenues, built convenient houſes[i] for the reception of a ſmall convent, and then ſent over ſuch a number as they thought proper, conſtituting priors over them. And there was the ſame difference in theſe cells[k] as in the former. For ſome of them were conventual and had priors of their own chuſing[l]; and theſe were entire ſocieties within themſelves, and received the revenues belonging to their ſeveral houſes for their own uſe and benefit, paying only the ancient apport[m], or what was at firſt the ſurpluſage[n], to the foreign houſe. But others depended wholly upon the foreign houſes, their priors were ſet over them[o], their monks were often foreigners, and removable at pleaſure; and they returned all their revenues to the foreign head houſes. For which reaſon their eſtates were generally ſeiſed during the wars between England and France, and reſtored to them again upon the return of peace.

"Ita quod proficua manerii et eccleſiae "praedict. (ſcil. de Hagh) ultra ſuſtentationem unius "prioris et ſocii ſui capellani divina in prioratu prae"dict. celebratur. nomine apporti quolibet anno "praefatis abbati et conventui (ſcil. de Caeſariſburgo) "in ſubventionem ſuſtentationis ſuae ſolverentur."

[o] They often ſent over very mean perſons, if biſhop Groſtead be not too ſevere, in epiſt. 53, 54. 108.

THESE alien priories were moſt of them made [a] by ſuch as had foreign abbies of their own, or ſome of their family's, foundation.

PRECEPTORIES were manors or eſtates of the Knights Templars, where erecting churches for the ſervice of God, and convenient houſes, they placed ſome of their fraternity under the government of one of thoſe more eminent Templars, who had been by the grand maſter created " praeceptores templi," to take care of the lands and rents in that place and neighbourhood, and ſo were only cells to the principal houſe at London [b].

COMMANDRIES were the ſame amongſt the Knights Hoſpitalars, as preceptories were amongſt the Templars, viz. ſocieties of thoſe knights placed upon ſome of their eſtates in the country under the government of a commander, who were allowed proper maintenance out of the revenues under their care, and accounted for the remainder to the grand prior at London [c].

BY Hoſpitals in the following work I mean ſuch houſes for the relief of poor and impotent people [d] as were incorporated by royal patents, and made capable of gifts and grants in ſucceſſion.

FRIERIES were houſes erected for the habitation of friers; they were very ſeldom endowed [e], yet many of them were large and ſtately buildings, and had noble churches, in which many great perſons choſe to be buried.

BEFORE I mention the officers of theſe houſes, give me leave to obſerve, that the ſame abby or priory is many times ſaid in monaſtic writers to have had different founders. For we often meet with the firſt, ſecond, third, and even ſixth founder. But the firſt only was properly the founder, and the others only great benefactors, who either reſtored the old foundation, after it was greatly damaged by time, fire or the like, or made ſome conſiderable addition to it[a]. The ſucceſſors of the founders, and patrons, or chief lords of the fee[b], are likewiſe many times ſtyled founders[c].

[d] Beſides the poor and impotent, there generally were in theſe hoſpitals, two or three Religious; one to be maſter or prior, and one or two to be chaplains and confeſſors; and theſe obſerved the rule of St. Auſtin, and probably ſubjected the poor and impotent to ſome religious reſtraints, as well as to the local ſtatutes. Hoſpitals were originally deſign'd for the relief and entertainment of travellers upon the road, and particularly of pilgrims; ſee p. 212. 219, 220. 581, etc. of this book; and therefore were generally built upon the road's ſide; but of later years they have been always founded for fix'd inhabitants.

[e] Friers were by their profeſſion Mendicants, and to have no property; but moſt of their houſes had ſome ſhops and gardens belonging to them; and the Dominicans of Kings Langely, were endowed with 122 l. per ann. This work doth not take in the many hermitages, chauntries, and free chapels in England and Wales, but ſome of them being mentioned in it, it may not be amiſs to ſay what they were.

Hermitages were Religious cells erected in private and ſolitary places for ſingle perſons or communities, many times endowed, and ſometimes annex'd to larger Religious houſes. Vide Kennet's Gloſſary in voce Heremitorium, Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 339. Thoreſby's Leeds, p. 91. The hermites of cells not endowed are ſpoken of as common beggars, in pat. 13 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 8. et p. 2. m. 22.

Chauntries were endowments of lands or other revenues for the maintainance of one or more prieſts to ſay daily maſs for the ſouls of the founder, and his relations and benefactors, ſometimes at a particular altar, and oftentimes in little chapels added to cathedral and parochial churches for that purpoſe. See Godolph. Repert. p. 329. Fuller, book vi. p. 350. Weaver, p. 733.

Free Chapels were places of Religious worſhip exempt from all juriſdiction of the ordinary, ſave only, that the incumbents were generally inſtituted by the biſhop, and inducted by the archdeacon of the place; moſt of theſe chapels were built upon the manors and ancient demeſnes of the crown, whilſt in the king's hands, for the uſe of himſelf and retinue when he came to reſide there, as Kennet's Gloſſary in voce Demeſne, and his Caſe of appropriations, p. 6. And when the crown parted with thoſe eſtates, the chapels went along with them and retain'd their firſt freedom; but ſome lords having had free chapels in manors that don't appear to have been ancient demeſne of the crown, ſuch are thought to have been built and privileged by grants from the crown. See biſhop Gibſon's Codex, p. 237. Yet Mr. Newcourt ſaith, that A. D. 1521. biſhop Fitz James converted a decay'd chantry at Rainham in Eſſex, with the conſent of the patron, into a free chapel to be held with all its rights, and govern'd by an honeſt and literate layman, without mentioning any grant from the crown for it. See his Repert. vol. ii. p. 482.

In every abby the chief officer was the abbat[d] or abbeſs, who preſided in great pomp, was generally called Lord abbat[e] or Lady abbeſs, and had a kitchen and other offices diſtinct from the common ones of the ſociety.

In every priory the chief officer was the prior[f] or prioreſs, who had the ſame power in priories, as abbats and abbeſſes had in abbies, but lived in a leſs ſplendid and expenſive manner, tho' in ſome of the greater houſes they were called Lord prior, and Lady prioreſs.

Next under the abbat, in every abby, was the prior[g], who in the abbat's abſence had the chief care of the houſe, and under him was the ſubprior, and in great abbies, the third, fourth[h], and even fifth prior, who had their reſpective ſhares in the government of the monks, etc. and were removable at the will of the abbat, as all the other obedientarii or officers were. In every priory, next under the prior, was the ſubprior, who aſſiſted the prior whilſt preſent, and acted in his ſtead when abſent.

The ſix greater officers in the monaſtery of Croyland[i] (and perhaps in moſt others) were, 1. Magiſter operis, or maſter of the fabric, who probably looked after the buildings, and took care to keep them in good repair.

2. Eleemosynarius, or the almoner, who had the overſight of the alms of the houſe, (which were every day diſtributed at the gate to the poor) who divided the alms upon the founder's day, and at other obits and anniverſaries, and in ſome places provided for the maintenance and education of the choriſters[k].

3. Pitantiarius, who had the care of the pietancies[l], which were allowances upon particular occaſions over and above the common proviſions.

4. Sacrista, or the ſexton, who took care of the veſſels, books, and veſtments belonging to the church, looked after and accounted for the oblations at the great altar, and other altars and images in the church, and ſuch legacies as were given either to the fabric or utenſils; he likewiſe provided bread and wine for the ſacrament[m], and took care of burying the dead.

5. Camerarius, or the chamberlain, who had the chief care of the dormitory, and provided beds and bedding for the monks, razors and towels for ſhaving them, and part of, if not all, their cloathing[n].

6. Cellerarius, or the cellarer, who was to procure proviſions for the monks and all ſtrangers reſorting to the convent, viz. all ſorts of fleſh, fiſh, fowl, wine, Refectionarius, who look'd after the hall, providing table cloths, napkins, towels, diſhes, plates, ſpoons, and all other neceſſaries for it, even ſervants to wait and tend there; he had likewiſe the keeping of the cups, ſalts, ewers, and all the ſilver utenſils whatſoever belonging to the houſe, except the church plate[e].

There was likewiſe Coquinarius[f], Gardinarius, and Portarius[g]; "et in coenobiis, "quae jus archidiaconale in praediis et eccleſiis ſuis obtinuerunt, erat monachus qui "archidiaconi titulo et munere inſignitus eſt[h].

In every great abby there was a large room called the Scriptorium[i], where ſeveral writers made it their whole buſineſs to tranſcribe books for the uſe of the library. They ſometimes indeed wrote the leiger books of the houſe, and the miſſals, and other books uſed in divine ſervice; but they generally were upon other works, viz. the the Fathers, Claſſics, Hiſtories, etc[k]. John Whethamſted abbat of St. Alban's cauſed above eighty books[l] to be thus tranſcribed during his abbacy. Fifty eight were tranſcribed by the care of one abbat at Glaſtonbury[m]; and ſo zealous were the monks in general for this work, that they often got lands given, and churches appropriated for the carrying of it on[n].

In all the greater abbies, there were alſo perſons appointed to take notice of the principal occurrences of the kingdom, and at the end of every year to digeſt them into annals[a]. In theſe records they particularly preſerved the memories of their founders and benefactors[b], the years and days of their births and deaths, their marriages, children, and ſucceſſors; ſo that recourſe was ſometimes had to them for proving perſons ages[c], and genealogies[d]; tho' 'tis to be feared that ſome of thoſe pedigrees were drawn up from tradition only[e]; and that in moſt of their accounts they were favourable to their friends, and ſevere upon their enemies. The conſtitutions of the clergy in their national and provincial ſynods, and (after the Conqueſt) even acts of parliament, were ſent to the abbies to be recorded; which leads me to mention the uſe and advantage of theſe Religious houſes.

FOR, firſt, The choiceſt records and treaſures in the kingdom were preſerved in them. An exemplification of the charter of liberties granted by king Henry 1. was ſent to ſome abby[f] in every county to be preſerved. Charters and inquiſitions relating to the county of Cornwal were repoſited in the priory of Bodmin[g]; a great many rolls were lodged in the abby of Leiceſter and priory of Kenilworth, till taken from thence by king Henry 3[h]. King Edward 1. ſent to the Religious houſes to ſearch for his title to the kingdom of Scotland in their leigers and chronicles, as the moſt authentic records for proof of his right to that crown[i]. When his ſovereignty was acknowledged in Scotland, he ſent letters to have it inſerted in the chronicles of the abby of Winchomb[k], and the priory of Norwich[l], and probably of many other ſuch like places[m]. And when he decided the controverſy relating to the crown of Scotland between Robert Brus and John Baliol, he wrote to the dean and chapter of St Paul's London, requiring them to enter into their chronicles the exemplification therewith ſent of that deciſion[n].

THE learned Mr. Selden hath his greateſt evidences for the dominion of the narrow ſeas belonging to the king of Great Britain, from monaſtic records.

THE evidences and money of private families were oftentimes ſent to theſe houſes to be preſerved[o]. The ſeals of noblemen were depoſited there upon their deaths[p]: And even the king's money was ſometimes lodged in them [a].

SECONDLY, They were ſchools of learning and education; for every convent had one perſon or more appointed for this purpoſe; and all the neighbours, that deſired it, might have their children taught grammar and church muſick without any expence to them [b]. In the nunneries alſo young women were taught to work, and to read Engliſh, and ſometimes Latin alſo. So that not only the lower rank of people, who could not pay for their learning, but moſt of the noblemen and gentlemens daughters were educated in thoſe places [c].

THIRDLY, All the monaſteries were in effect great hoſpitals, and were moſt of them obliged to relieve many poor people every day. They were likewiſe houſes of entertainment for almoſt all travellers. Even the nobility and gentry, when they were upon the road, lodged at one Religious houſe and dined at another [d], and ſeldom or never went to inns. In ſhort their hoſpitality was ſuch, that in the priory of Norwich one thouſand five hundred quarters of malt, and above eight hundred quarters of wheat, and all other things in proportion, were generally ſpent every year [e].

FOURTHLY, The nobility and gentry provided not only for their old ſervants in theſe houſes by corrodies [f], but for their younger children [g] and empoveriſhed friends, by making them firſt monks and nuns, and in time priors and prioreſſes, abbats and abbeſſes.

FIFTHLY, They were of conſiderable advantage to the crown, 1. By the profits received from the death of one abbat or prior to the election, or rather confirmation, of another [h]. 2. By great fines paid for the confirmation of their liberties [i]. 3. By many corrodies granted to old ſervants of the crown[a], and penſions to the king's clerks and chaplains[b], till they got preferment.

D. 747. by the ſeventh canon of council of Cloveſho, as Wilkins's Councils, vol. i. p. 95. See alſo the notes upon that canon, in Johnſon's Collection of canons, etc.

[c] Fuller and Collier, as before; biſhop Burnet (Reform. vol. i. p. .) ſaith ſo of Godſtow. Archbiſhop Greenfield ordered that young gentlewomen, who came to the nunneries either for piety or breeding, ſhould wear white veils, to diſtinguiſh them from the profeſſed, who wore black ones, 11 Kal. Jul. anno pontif. 6. M. Hutton. ex regiſtr. ejus, p. 207. In the accounts of the cellareſs of Carhow near Norwich, there is an account of what was received "pro "prehendinationibus," or the board of young ladies and their ſervants for education, "rec. de domina "Margeria Wederly prehendinat. ibidem xi. ſepti-"manas xiiii s. iv d. pro menſa unius famulae dictae "Margeriae per iii. ſeptimanas viii d. per ſept." etc.

[d] Burnet's Ref. vol. i. p. 223. and Append. p. 139. Collier's Eccl. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 165. Complaint was made to the parliament, 3 Ed. 1. that many abbies and priories had been thereby much oppreſſed, and an act was made to reſtrain it, as Statutes at large, vol. i. p. 45. When the clergy of the province of York granted a tenth in convocation, A.D. 1408. they excepted the priories of Wirkſop and Newſted, "pro eo quod in regia ſtrata ſituantur, propter quod "hoſpitum adventu ultra ſuas facultates onerantur." as Dr. Hutton's collections, ex regiſtr. Hen. Bowet archiepiſc. It was likewiſe ſometimes alledged by the Religious, in order to get a church appropriated to them, that their houſe, lying near the road, was impoveriſhed by an over great reſort of ſtrangers.

[e] As appears from the cellarer's account; before the Reformation there was in fact no aſſeſſment upon pariſhes for the relief of the poor (to which 800,000 l. per ann. is now thought to be paid in the kingdom, as Collier, vol. ii. p. 165.) But I can't think this to be ſo much owing to the relief the poor received at the Religious houſes (as ſome have done) as to the great difference between the general ſtate of the nation now and then. It hath likewiſe been often ſaid, that the highways were repaired out of devotion before that time, and that there was no compulſive act for the repair of them till 2 et 3 Phil. et Mar. which may be true, and yet not owing to the Reformation, but to the finding the former method ineffectual.

[f] Or ſet allowances of meat, drink, and cloathing, which the heirs of the founders had a right to for ſo many of their ſervants. Fuller, book vi. p. 326. Cowel's Interpreter in voce; Collier, vol. ii. p. 165. Burnet's Reform. vol. i. p. 223. Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 933.

[g] For even the greateſt and beſt families of the kingdom provided for ſome of their children this way. Ralph earl of Weſtmorland having twenty children, made three of his daughters nuns, and K. Edward 4. having four daughters, made one of them a nun at Dartford in Kent, as Fuller, book vi. p. 297. ſee alſo p. 326. Henry lord of Harley had ſix ſons monks, as Angl. Sacr. vol. i. p. 205. King Edward 1. made his daughter Mary a nun at Ambreſbury, and thirteen noblemens daughters. Angl. Sacr. vol. i. p. 208. And many other inſtances may be ſeen in Dugd. Baron.

[h] The kings uſed to keep ſome of them long void; and thereby rais'd a fair revenue, as Madox aſſerts in Hiſt. Exchequer, p. 209.

[i] See Madox's Hiſt. Exchequer, p. 283. etc. where he ſhews that the abbat and convent of Battel paid fifteen hundred marks 14 Joan. for the confirmation of their liberties, and that many other houſes frequently paid conſiderable ſums upon this account, as particularly the abbat of Furneis paid, 11 Hen. 3. four thouſand marks for the confirmation of liberties formerly granted to his convent, p. 286. "Hiis diebus "Wulfricus Spot conſtruxit abbatiam Burton vocatam, deditque ei omnem haereditatem paternam ap-"preciatam ad DCC. libras; et ut haec donatio rata "haberetur, dedit Athelredo regi CCC. mancas auri, "pro ejus confirmatione, unicuique epiſcopo v. man-"cas, et duobus achiepiſcopis x. mancas, et unicuique "abbatiae v. mancas; hoc fuit A. D. 1001. Tanti "conſtat unius monaſterii confirmatio." Collect. Brian. Twyne ♉ p. 182.

SIXTHLY, They were likewiſe of conſiderable advantage to the places where they had their ſites and eſtates: 1. By cauſing great reſort to them, and getting grants of fairs and markets for them[c]. 2. By freeing them from the foreſt laws[d]. 3. By letting their lands at eaſy rates[e].

LASTLY, They were great ornaments to the country; many of them were really noble buildings; and tho' not actually ſo grand and neat, yet perhaps as much admired in their times, as Chelſea and Greenwich hoſpitals are now. Many of the abby churches were equal, if not ſuperior, to our preſent cathedrals; and they muſt have been as much an ornament to the country, and employ'd as many workmen in building and keeping them in repair, as noblemens and gentlemens ſeats now.

ON the other hand, it muſt be confeſſed,

FIRST, That theſe Regulars were very injurious to the Secular and Parochial clergy: 1. By taking many prebends and benefices. The abbats of Athelney, Michelney[f], and Becc Harlowin had prebends in the cathedral church of Wells annexed to their abbatſhips. And in the metropolitical church of York, the prebend of Salton was annexed to the priory of Hexam, and the prebend of Bramham to the priory of Noſtel. And ſo many other priors[g], and monks[g] of all ſorts, and even friers[g] got diſpenſations to hold prebends and livings; that at, or juſt before the Reformation, biſhop Burnet ſaith[h], "They were every where poſſeſſed of the beſt church benefices." 2. By getting ſo many churches impropriated to them[i], and getting penſions out of many others[k]. 3. By the many exemptions they got from the juriſdiction of the biſhops[l], and from paying tythes[m].

SECONDLY, theſe houſes of monks and friers ſeem to have been injurious to the nation in general: 1. By depriving the public of ſo many hands as might have been very ſerviceable to it in proper employments[n]. 2. By an unfair and ungenerous way of trading[o]. 3. By their houſes or churches being ſanctuaries for all manner of offenders[p].

IV. As to the diſſolution of theſe Religious foundations, we may obſerve, that king Edgar, archbiſhop Dunſtan, and the biſhops Ethelwold and Oſwald, in the tenth century, ejected the Seculars and put in Regulars, as hath been before mentioned[a].

[n] Fuller, in his Church Hiſt. book ii. p. 137. ſaith, this kingdom had in the ninth century more monks than military men, and thereto attributes the ſucceſs of the Danes over us; as Brady likewiſe doth, Hiſt. of England, p. 122. Brady ſpeaks alſo of the wealth and number of the monaſtics as one cauſe of our being conquered by the Normans, p. 189. This hath likewiſe been thought one occaſion of the pope's gaining ſo much power here; ſee Inet's Church Hiſt. vol. i. p. 345. No doubt but it was a great hindrance to trade.

[o] Fuller, ibid. p. 282.

[p] This was long complain'd of as a great grievance: "Unthrifts riot and run in debt, upon the "boldneſs of theſe places, yea and rich men run thither with poor mens goods, there they build, there "they ſpend, and bid their creditors go whiſtle them; "mens wives run thither with their huſbands plate, "and ſay they dare not abide with their huſbands "for beating; theeves bring thither their ſtolen "goods and live thereon; there deviſe they new "robberies, nightly they ſteal out, they rob and "reave, and kill, and come in again, as tho' thoſe "places gave them not only a ſafeguard for the "harm they have done, but a licence to do more." Stow's Chronicle, p. 443.

Richard de Belmeis, by the authority of pope Eugenius 3. and king Stephen, turn'd a Secular college into an abby of Auſtin canons at Lilleſhull[b]. And pope Alexander 3. and king Henry 2. turn'd the Seculars out of Waltham[c], and placed Regulars there in their ſtead.

By the ancient laws of this realm, it was lawful for the donors of lands to religious and charitable uſes, or their heirs, to reſume the lands, if the rents and profits of them were not applied to the ends and uſes they were given for[d].

The uſes appointed by their founders had ſometimes been altered by their heirs[e].

The monks many times ſold the lands and poſſeſſions which their founders and benefactors had charitably given them[f]; and the laws, which forbad it in general, allowed it in particular caſes[g]. They likewiſe ſometimes gave away their lands to their relations[h].

The privilege of ſanctuary in monaſteries was often complain'd of in parliament, as protecting the moſt notorious offenders from juſtice, and encouraging all manner of villany. From the attempts made againſt them in the reigns of king Henry 4. and king Henry 5. it is evident that the revenues of theſe houſes had been long envied, and thought too great. And perhaps that ſmall part of the alien priories, which had been given to the laity, might make them long for more.

As learning revived, great men grew fond of founding colleges and houſes of learning, and partly endowed moſt of them with lands given to the maintenance of monks.

About A. D. 1390. William of Wickham biſhop of Wincheſter, by the leave of the then pope and king, bought the alien priories of Hornchurch and Writtle in Eſſex, and ſettled them on his new college at Oxford[i]. And, after the ſuppreſſion of alien priories, Takely in Eſſex, and Hamele in Hampſhire, were ſettled upon this college, and Andover was ſettled upon his college at Wincheſter[k].

Archbishop Chicheley founded All Souls in Oxford about A. D. 1437. and got the revenues of ſeveral alien priories ſettled on it[l].

K. Henry 6. founded the college at Eaton, and King's college in Cambridge about A. D. 1441. and endowed them chiefly with alien priories[m].

William Wainfleet biſhop of Wincheſter founded Magdalene college in Oxford about A. D. 1459. and got the priory of Sele or Atteſele[n] in Suſſex, and the priory of Seleburne[n] in Hampſhire ſettled upon it, tho' the founder of the latter had carefully forbidden ſuch alienation[a]. The hoſpitals of Aynho[b] and Brakely in Northamptonſhire were alſo united to this college A. D. 1484. and the priory of Luffield was intended to have been added to it[c].

And in the latter part it is enacted, That if land given for a chantry, light, ſuſtenance of poor people, or other alms to be maintained or done, be not aliened, but ſuch alms is withdrawn for the ſpace of two years, an action ſhall lie for the donor or his heir to demand the land ſo given in demean. The pope having granted the deanry of St. Paul's to A. cardinal of St. Marcellus, king Edward 2. wrote to him, and, after endeavouring by good words to perſuade him to quit that promotion, concludes thus: "Profecto ſcire vos volu-"mus, quod, ſecundum legem et conſuetudinem regni "noſtri, poſſeſſiones, eccleſiis et locis religioſis col-"latae, ſi ad uſum fundatorum et donatorum volun-"tati et intentioni contrarium applicentur, certiſſime "per ipſos fundatores et donatores et eorum haeredes "poterunt revocari." A. D. 1497. John Alcock biſhop of Ely with the king's conſent ſuppreſs'd St. Rhadegund's[d] nunnery in Cambridge, and with the revenues thereof founded Jeſus college.

A. D. 1505. Margaret counteſs of Richmond and Derby, founded Chriſt's college in Cambridge, and obtain'd the pope's licence to ſuppreſs the abby of Creyke[e] in Norfolk, and to ſettle the revenues of it upon this college.

ABOUT A. D. 1508. the ſame good counteſs began to convert an ancient hoſpital or priory dedicated to St. John the Evangeliſt at Cambridge into St. John's college[f], and her executors carried on her deſign. Biſhop Fiſher was one of them, and at his deſire the nunneries of Heyham in Kent and Broomhalle in Berkſhire, and an hoſpital of Regulars at Oſprike were ſuppreſſed, and the revenues of them ſettled upon this college[g].

A. D. 1515. Braſen Noſe college in Oxford was founded, and William Smith biſhop of Lincoln bought the priory of Cold Norton in Oxfordſhire of the abbat and convent of Weſtminſter, and gave the lands belonging to it, to this new foundation[h].

NOT long after, cardinal Wolſey being deſirous of founding two colleges, viz. one at Ipſwich in Suffolk (the place of his nativity) and another at Oxford; and finding there were ſeveral mean monaſteries in England, where both the revenues and the number of Religious were too ſmall to keep up regular diſcipline, church ſervice, and hoſpitality, obtain'd a bull of pope Clement 7. dated 3 Non. Apr. A. D. 1524. for ſuppreſſing St. Frideſwide's priory in Oxford, and in July following he obtain'd a grant of that priory from the king. On 3 Id. Sept. of the ſame year he obtain'd a bull from the ſame pope for ſuppreſſing (with the king's leave) as many ſmall monaſteries as were needful to raiſe a revenue not exceeding three thouſand ducats per ann[i].

On June 7. 1525. the king conſented thereto, and granted a commiſſion to John Aleyn clerk, John Skewſe, and John St. Clere, for that purpoſe[k]; and thereupon were ſuppreſſed the priories of Blackmore, Staneſgate, Thoby, Typtre, and Wikes in Eſſex, Dodnaſh and Snape in Suffolk, Canwell and Sandwell in Staffordſhire, Daventre in Northamptonſhire, Littlemore in Oxfordſhire, Poghley in Berkſhire, Ravenſton and Tyckford in Buckinghamſhire, Beigham and de Calceto in Suſſex, Lieſnes and Tunbridge in Kent. Prid. Idus Maii A. D. 1528. the pope granted two bulls for diſſolving (with the king's conſent) the priories of St. Peter's at Ipſwich, Felixſtow, Rumborough, and Blithborough in Suffolk, Bromhil and Mountjoy in Norfolk, Delapree in Hertfordſhire, and Wallingford in Berkſhire[l]; and they were thereupon all diſſolved (except Delapree which was granted to St. Albans[m], and Blithborough, which eſcaped 'till the general diſſolution) and granted with the former to the cardinal, for the endowment of his colleges. The ſame pope Clement 7. granted a bull to cardinal Wolſey dated 4 Non. Nov. A. D. 1528. to ſuppreſs monaſteries, where there were not above ſix monks to the value of eight thouſand ducats per ann. for endowing Windſor and King's college in Cambridge[n]. Another bull was granted prid. Id.

Nov. 1528. to the cardinals Wolſey and Campeius to ſuppreſs monaſteries, where there were leſs than twelve monks, and to annex them to the greater monaſteries[a]. Another bull was granted for the ſame purpoſe prid. Calend. Sept. A.D. 1529[b].

PRID. Idus Nov. 1528, a bull was granted to the cardinals Wolſey and Campeius to enquire about abbies, to be ſuppreſs'd in order to be made cathedrals[c]. A new bull was granted to the ſame perſons 4 Cal. Jun. 1529. with further powers relating to the new cathedrals[d]; for ſome of the dioceſes were thought too large, and wanted much (as it was ſaid) to be reduced, that the biſhops might the better diſcharge their offices. But the promoting of learning ſeems to have been the chief intent of the cardinal and moſt others in ſuppreſſing theſe houſes, tho' probably ſome perſons both then and afterwards promoted it with other views: Archbiſhop Cranmer particularly is ſaid to have been much for it, becauſe he could not carry on the Reformation without it[e]. And as the increaſe of learning had render'd the corruptions of the church of Rome more viſible, many others might alſo be againſt theſe houſes as nurſeries of popiſh ſuperſtition; but other things concurred to bring on their ruin; for,

FIRST, Many of the Religious were certainly looſe and vicious, and the denying them marriage probably contributed towards it. I can't believe they were in general ſo bad as the viſitors repreſented them, becauſe they, who are to be run down, are always to be ſet forth in the worſt light; and lord Herbert tells us[f], " That ſome ſocieties " behaved ſo well that their lives were not only exempt from notorious faults, but their " ſpare time was beſtowed in writing books, painting, carving, graving, and the like " exerciſes." The preamble to the act of 27 Hen. 8. c. 28. for ſuppreſſing the leſſer monaſteries ſaith, " In the greater monaſteries, thanks be to God, religion is right " well obſerved and kept up;" and yet the viſitors charged a great many foul crimes on the monks of Battel[g], Canterbury[g], Abingdon, Bermondſey, and almoſt all the greater, as well as leſſer houſes. The large penſions and good preferments, which were afterwards given to a great number of them, is likewiſe an argument, that, tho' many of them might be vicious, yet they were not in general ſo bad as they were repreſented[h].

SECONDLY, The caſting off the pope's ſupremacy was urg'd for caſting off the the monks, who, notwithſtanding their ſubſcriptions, were generally thought to be againſt it in their hearts, and ready to join any foreign power, which ſhould invade the nation[i], whilſt the king was excommunicated by the pope.

THIRDLY, Their revenues not employ'd according to the intent and deſign of the donors was alſo alledged againſt them; but the diſcovery of many cheats in images[k], of many feigned miracles, and counterfeit relicks brought the monks every where into great diſgrace, and contributed towards their overthrow: And perhaps the Obſervant friers being ſo much againſt the king's divorce from queen Catharine[l], might exaſperate him againſt all monks and friers in general. But, not unlikely,

FOURTHLY, The greateſt cauſe might be, the king's want of a large ſupply[m], and the people's willingneſs to ſave their pockets; tho' it was certainly haſtned by the account, which the viſitors gave of them. For, after ſome debate in council[a], how to proceed with theſe houſes, the king appointed commiſſioners to viſit them, and they made ſuch a bad report, that, when a motion was ſhortly after made in parliament, that, to ſupport the king's ſtate and ſupply his wants, all the Religious houſes might be conferred upon the crown, which were not able to expend clearly above two hundred pounds per ann. it met with but little oppoſition[b] in either houſe, and an act was paſſed for that purpoſe about March A. D. 1535.

By this act and the proceedings of the viſitors, about three hundred and eighty[c] houſes were diſſolved, and a revenue of thirty or thirty two thouſand pounds per ann[d]. came to the crown; beſides one hundred thouſand pounds in plate and jewels. Some ſay, that ten thouſand perſons were hereby ſent to ſeek their fortunes in the wide world, without any other allowance than forty ſhillings and a new gown to ſome few of them[e]. Others ſay, that ſuch of the Religious as deſired to continue their profeſſion, were allowed to go into the greater monaſteries, and ſuch as choſe to go into the world, being prieſts, had every one the above mentioned allowance, and that ſome of them for their readineſs to ſurrender, got ſmall penſions for life[f]. And biſhop Burnet ſaith, he can't find that any of theſe leſſer houſes were actually diſſolved 'till two years after the paſſing this act[g].

It is certain that thirty one of theſe leſſer houſes had the king's licence to continue ſome time longer[h], viz. Bittleſden in Bucks, Chatteris and Denny in Cambridgeſhire, St. Mary's in Cheſter, Le Dale or Parco Stanley in Derbyſhire, Canon Leigh and Polleſhoo in Devonſhire, Bindon in Dorſetſhire, St. Mary's in Wincheſter, Wormſley in Herefordſhire, St. Mary's in Huntingdon, Cokerſand in Lancaſhire, Grace Dieu and Ulveſcroft in Leiceſterſhire, Heynings and Kyme in Lincolnſhire, De la Pray in Northamptonſhire, Alnewick and St. Bartholomew's Newcaſtle in Northumberland, Newſtead and Walingwell in Nottinghamſhire, Hepp or Shappe in Weſtmorland, Lacock in Wiltſhire, Cockill in Worceſterſhire, the Chartreuſe houſe at Hull, Marike, Keling, Bilaund, Eggleſtone, and Delaval[i] in Yorkſhire, and Nethe in Wales. There were ſome houſes diſſolved before this act; for a general viſitation of all abbies, priories, and Religious houſes having been adviſed for the better effecting their diſſolution, commiſſioners were appointed, inſtructions prepared for their proceeding therein, injunctions drawn up to be given to the Religious of every houſe in the king's name, and ſuch viſitation was actually held in October, November, etc. A. D. 1535. and ſo managed by the commiſſioners, that many of the Religious deſired to leave their profeſſion and habit; and ſome of them gave up their houſes, as the abbat and convent of Langden, the prior and convent of Folkeſton, Dover and Bilſington in Kent; the prior and convent of Merton in Yorkſhire, Horneby in Lancaſhire, and Tilty in Eſſex, which were all reſigned in November, February, and March 1535. before the act paſſed[k]. And even three years before this, there was one houſe given up, upon I know not what motives, viz. the priory of Chriſt Church near Aldgate in A. D. 1532[l].

The ſuppreſſion of theſe houſes occaſioned great diſcontents, which were probably increaſed by the Secular as well as Regular clergy[m], and fomented by the greater abbats[m], and in October 1536. broke out into a rebellion in Lincolnſhire, where doctor Makerel prior of Barlings, diſguiſed like a cobler, and ſtyling himſelf Captain Cobler [a], drew after him a great body of men, who were indeed ſoon diſperſed upon the duke of Suffolk's coming with a ſmall army againſt them, and offering them pardon upon laying down their arms. But within ſix days [b] after this inſurrection was appeaſed, another broke out in Yorkſhire, called, The Pilgrimage of Grace [c], which grew very formidable, and was neither eaſily nor quickly quieted. But when it was appeaſed, and the king had by alliances ſecured himſelf from the dangers threatened by the pope, and the expectations of Rome from the princeſs Mary were much clouded by the birth of prince Edward [d]; he reſolved to ſuppreſs the reſt of the monaſteries, and thereupon, A. D. 1537. appointed a new viſitation, requiring the viſitors [e] to examine every thing that related either to the converſation of the Religious, or their affection to the king and the ſupremacy, or to their cheats, impoſtures, or ſuperſtitions, or how they were affected during the late commotions, and to diſcover all that was amiſs in them, and to report it to the lord vicegerent. This cauſed the greater abbies to be ſurrender'd apace [f]; for ſome of them having been faulty in the late rebellion, were liable to the king's diſpleaſure, and ſurrendered their houſes to ſave their lives. Some began to like the Reformation, and were upon that account eaſily perſuaded to it; others, ſeeing their diſſolution approaching, had ſo much embezzled their revenues, that they were ſcarce able to keep up their houſes. A great many monks were executed for being in the rebellion; and no doubt but many were prevailed upon by the viſitors, who endeavour'd both by threats and promiſes to get their reſignations [g]. Many petitions were made, even by thoſe that were for the Reformation [h], that ſome of theſe houſes might be ſpared, but a reſolution being taken at court to extirpate them all, the petitions were rejected. There was no law to oblige the abbats and convents to reſign, but by ſome means or other they were all wrought upon to do it; and in the ſeſſions of parliament which began 28 Apr. 1539. and in the thirty firſt year of the king's reign, an act paſſed, by which all the Religious houſes, which ſince the former act were ſuppreſs'd, diſſolved, relinquiſhed, forfeited, or given up, or which ſhould thereafter be ſuppreſſed, forfeited or given up, were confirmed to the king and his ſucceſſors, and all the rents, profits, and revenues of them given to be diſpoſed of by the court of Augmentation for the king's profit, excepting ſuch only as were come into the king's hands by attainder of treaſon, which belong'd to the exchequer. By this act no houſes were ſuppreſs'd, but all the ſurrenders, which either were made or ſhould be made, were confirm'd: The mitred or parliamentary abbies were all in being at the paſſing of it, and eighteen abbats were preſent at the firſt reading of it, twenty at the ſecond, and ſeventeen at the third; and yet none of them either oppoſed it, or voted againſt it; but were every one ſhortly brought to ſurrender, except the abbats of Colcheſter, Glaſtonbury, and Reading [i], who could not be prevail'd upon by any motives to ſurrender, and therefore were accuſed of high treaſon and executed, and their abbies were ſeiſed as forfeited to the king by their attainder. The next year [k] a bill was brought in for ſuppreſſing the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, and paſſed in a ſhort time, and thereby all their revenues were given to the king, who by the ſuppreſſion of theſe greater houſes obtained a revenue of about one hundred thouſand pounds per ann [l]. beſides a large ſum in plate and jewels. But the Religious of theſe houſes had almoſt all of them ſomething given them for their preſent ſubſiſtence, and penſions aſſigned them for life, or 'till they were preferr'd to ſome dignity or cure of greater value than their penſions, which were generally proportioned according to their readineſs to promote the king's meaſures; tho' ſome, who oppoſed them for a time, fared better than thoſe who complied immediately. Theſe penſions roſe ſo high, that the king got very little out of ſome of theſe houſes, till the Religious either died, or were otherwiſe provided for; however out of what came to him, he founded ſix new biſhoprics, viz. thoſe of Weſtminſter (which was chang'd by queen Elizabeth into a deanry and twelve prebends, and ſalaries for a ſchoolmaſter, uſher, etc.) Peterborough, Cheſter, Glouceſter, Briſtol, and Oxford[a], the colleges of Chriſt Church in Oxford, and the Holy Trinity at Cambridge, and finiſhed King's college chapel there. He likewiſe founded profeſſorſhips of Divinity, Law, Phyſic, and the Hebrew and Greek tongues in both univerſities; he gave the houſe of Grey friers, and St. Bartholomew's hoſpital to the city of London[b], and a perpetual penſion to the Poor Knights at Windſor; and laid out great ſums in building and fortifying many ports in the channel; and intended to have done more[c], but whether out of policy, to give content to the nobility and gentry by ſelling theſe lands at low rates, or out of eaſineſs to his courtiers, or an unmeaſured laviſhneſs in his expences, he ſoon diſabled himſelf from it; and having in the mean time had wars both with Scotland and France, there were granted to him, for a further ſupply, by the parliament, which began in November A. D. 1545. all colleges, chantries, free chapels, hoſpitals, and guilds; ſome of which had been before ſurrendred. This act was made ſo general, that even thoſe great nurſeries of learning, the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge, with thoſe of Wincheſter and Eaton, were included; and, upon the breaking up of the parliament in February, notice was ſent to both univerſities, that their colleges were at the king's diſpoſal; this put them upon petitioning for mercy, which was ſoon obtained; and letters of thanks were ſent for the continuance of them[d]. But the commiſſioners named in this act for giving the king poſſeſſion of the colleges, etc. did not enter upon many of them before his death, which happened in January following; and thereby moſt of them remained 'till A. D. 1548[e]. when, being granted by another act of parliament (in which the colleges of both univerſities were excepted) to K. Edward 6. they were ſoon deſtroyed, to the number of ninety colleges, one hundred and ten hoſpitals, and two thouſand three hundred ſeventy four[f] chantries and free chapels. Now, from hence give me leave to obſerve,

that

First, That the diſſolution of theſe houſes was an act, not of the church, but of the ſtate, prior to the Reformation, by a king and parliament of the Roman Catholic communion[g], in almoſt all points except the ſupremacy; and confirm'd by others[h] of the ſame communion.

Secondly, That very few of the papiſts wrote againſt the diſſolution of theſe houſes, and that ſeveral both of their clergy[i] and laity[k] accepted grants of their lands.

[a] In effect thirteen of our preſent cathedrals are owing to king Henry 8. by his new founding of Canterbury, Wincheſter, Durham, Worceſter, Rocheſter, Norwich, Ely, and Carliſle, and turning the priors and monks there into deans and prebendaries.

[b] And thereby probably hath been the occaſion of doing much more real good to mankind than K. Edgar did by founding forty ſeven monaſteries, as Sr. Richard Greſham ſaith in his letter to the king, in p. 150. of the Append. to Burnet's Reform. vol. iii.

[k] The duke of Norfolk and other ſtrict papiſts. Queen Mary granted away twenty ſites of Religious houſes, and a great many abby lands in the firſt year of her reign, but was more ſparing afterwards. Sr. William Petre purchaſed a large parcel at Ingarſtone, etc. and pope Paul 4. granted him a diſpenſation to retain them, upon his affirming, that he was ready to apply them to ſpiritual uſes, but he only founded an almſhouſe for twenty people. See Mon. Angl. vol. iii. p. ii. p. 207. Dugd. Baron. vol. ii. p. 415. See alſo Wilkins's Councils, vol. iv. p. 102. 112, 113. The biſhops and clergy in convocation, A. D.

Thirdly, That almoſt all the biſhops of the New learning, as the reformers were then called, were againſt the miſapplication of the abby lands [a].

Fourthly, That many popiſh biſhops were as great alienators of the lands of their biſhoprics [b], as any of the proteſtant ones were in the reign of king Edward 6. or that of queen Elizabeth.

Fifthly, If K. Henry 8. diſſolved monaſteries, and erected biſhoprics, pope Paſchal and king Henry 1. diſſolved the abby of Ely, and erected a biſhopric there A. D. 1108.

Sixthly, That all great eſtates are ſubject to accidents, and have often changed their owners in a ſhort time. And if the abby lands did not continue long in ſome families, they continued a great while in others [c]. Sr. William Dugdale obſerves, that of the two hundred ſeventy families treated of in the firſt volume of his Baronage [d], there were not above eight then remaining, and not one of thoſe in the floriſhing condition of their anceſtors. The worthy biſhop Fleetwood wiſely remarks [e] concerning a common ſaying, That when the eldeſt ſon is diſinherited, the eſtate ſeldom or never thrives. "It is with this obſervation as with moſt others (where the judgments of "God are called in to execute vengeance) that one or two examples either make a rule, "or confirm it, if made before: And an hundred others go for nothing, or are over-"look'd, that don't fall in with ſuch a maxim, eſpecially when it is to appearance on "the ſide of juſtice and religion."

Seventhly, One very great loſs, which happen'd by the haſty diſſolution and granting away of theſe houſes, was, that better proviſion was not made for the performance of divine offices in ſuch churches as had been appropriated to the monaſteries, which both the miniſters and pariſhioners of thoſe places ſuffer for to this day, and is juſtly accounted a ſcandal to our Reformation. And another was, the loſs of a great number of excellent books to the unſpeakable detriment of the learned world. For there was ſcarce any Religious houſe but had a library, and ſeveral of them very good ones. There were no leſs than one thouſand ſeven hundred mſſ. in the library at Peterborough [f]. The library of the Grey friers, London, built by Sr. Richard Whittingdon was one hundred twenty nine foot long, and thirty one foot broad, and well filled with books [g]. That the abby at Leiceſter and the priory of Dover had no mean libraries, appears from the catalogues of their books yet remaining in the Bodleian library [h]. Ingulf tells us, that when the library at Croyland was burnt, A. D. 1091. they loſt ſeven hundred books [i]. The great library at Wells had twenty five windows on each ſide of it [k]. And how much the monks liked and loved their books, appears from the great charge they were at in writing [l] and procuring them at firſt, and the care they took of them [m] afterwards; and the yearly prayers made at St. Auſtin's Canterbury (and pro-

And biſhop Gardiner is ſaid to have been as buſy as any in declaiming againſt them, and in many of his ſermons to have commended the king for ſuppreſſing them, as Burnet's Reform. vol. i. p. 251.

[b] Biſhop Thirlby alienated ſo much from Weſtminſter, as made the diſſolution of the biſhopric almoſt neceſſary. Heylin's Reform. p. 121. Collier's Eccl. Hiſt. vol. ii. p. 324. Biſhop Voiſy, temp. Hen. 8. conveyed away fourteen of the beſt manors from the biſhopric of Exeter, and charg'd the reſt with long penſions, as Godwin, De praeſul. p. 416. and Collier, vol. ii. p. 306. But queen Mary reſtored him to the biſhopric he had ſo much ſpoiled, and Ant. Harmer, p. 100, 101. defends him, as doing nothing but by the king's command, which no doubt but all the proteſtant alienators alſo had. Salcot alias Capon biſhop of Saliſbury, Sampſon biſhop of Litchfield, and Kitchen biſhop of Landaffe, tho' they complied with the Reformation, yet always ſhewed a diſlike to it, and were every one great alienators. bably bably in other houſes) for the ſouls of the dead, and the good eſtate of the living benefactors to their library[a].

AND here give me leave to take notice, that, however ignorant a great many of the monks might be, there ſeem to have been always ſome amongſt them that were both learned perſons themſelves, and encouragers of learning in others. The antient Britiſh, Iriſh, and Saxon monaſteries were the ſchools and univerſities of thoſe times, not only cells of devotion, but nurſeries of learned men for the uſe of the church[b]. Bede tells us that learning floriſhed here under archbiſhop Theodore and Adrian, who taught their ſcholars divinity, eccleſiaſtical poetry, arithmetic, aſtronomy, and the languages; ſo that ſome who lived in his time were as well verſed in the Greek and Latin tongues as in their own[c]. Shortly after indeed, when the Danes deſtroyed ſo many monks and monaſteries, ignorance very much prevailed, and there were very few who could either write or read Latin[d]. But when by the favor of king Edgar and the care of archbiſhop Dunſtan monaſteries were reſtored, learning revived[e] and floriſhed in them. And tho' after the Conqueſt, by bringing in of ſeveral new orders, who minded their rules and devotions more than their books, there were but few learned men, yet care was taken even then for the monks ſtudying[f], and all or moſt of the writers of thoſe times were monks and Regular canons[g], till the riſe of the Mendicant orders in the beginning of the reign of king Henry 3. In the preceding centuries, learning began to floriſh in our univerſities; tho' the reſtauration (at leaſt) of one of them was owing to the monks of Croiland[h], and in them were taught divinity and canon law (then much in vogue) and the friers reſorting thither in great numbers and applying themſelves cloſely to their ſtudies, outdid the monks in all faſhionable knowledge. But the monks quickly perceived it, and went alſo to the univerſities and ſtudied hard, that they might not be run down by the friers[i]. And as the friers got houſes in the univerſities, the monks alſo got colleges founded and endowed there[k] for the education of their novices, where they were for ſome years inſtructed in grammar, philoſophy, and ſchool divinity, and then returning home, improved their knowledge by their private ſtudies, to the ſervice of God and the credit of their reſpective ſocieties. So that a little before the Reformation the greateſt part of the proceeders in divinity at Oxford were monks and Regular canons[l]. It is likewiſe obſervable, that, when printing was firſt brought into England, the monks were great promoters of that uſeful invention; for Stow ſaith[m], William Caxton firſt practiſed the ſame in the abby at Weſtminſter, and that afterwards it was likewiſe practiſed in the abbies of St. Auſtin's Canterbury, St. Alban's, and other monaſteries of England. I hope therefore, that, notwithſtanding there might be in almoſt every houſe ſeveral very ignorant monks, yet many of them were very learned and induſtrious promoters of ſeveral uſeful parts of knowledge. And the learned world could not but have received great advantage from their books, if they had been preſerved. Their mſſ. bibles, fathers, and claſſics, would certainly have been of great uſe; and from their chronicles, regiſters, and other books relating to their own houſes and eſtates, the hiſtory and antiquities of the nation in general, and of almoſt every particular part of it, might have been more fully diſcovered. For the many good accounts of families, of the foundation, endowment, and appropriation of ſeveral pariſh churches, and the ordination of their vicarages; of the ancient bounds of foreſts, counties, hundreds and pariſhes; of the privileges, tenures and rents of many manors and eſtates, and the like, which we meet with in ſuch of their books as have been preſerved, is a ſufficient proof that the advantage would have been ſtill greater, if we had been ſo fortunate as to have preſerved more of them.

[m] Annals, fol. 404.

V. I HAVE now only to give ſome account of this work, and the part I have in it. The author, by writing upon this ſubject, did not intend either to recommend a monaſtic ſtate or to lament the loſs of it, but only, for the ſake of all lovers of antiquities, to give a ſhort view and account of thoſe houſes which once made ſo great a figure in this kingdom; this being, amongſt all the illuſtrations of our national hiſtory and antiquities (as he thought) much wanting. The catalogue of Religious houſes drawn up by Mr. Burton[a], and publiſhed by Mr. Speed in his Hiſtory of Great Britain is very uſeful, but too ſhort, and not to be had ſeparately from that large volume. Mr. Richard Broughton, a miſſionary prieſt, intended to give us a much better account of theſe houſes; but dying before he had finiſhed it, the book, which was publiſh'd in his name, A. D. 1655[b]. was very imperfect. About the ſame time was publiſhed the firſt volume of that noble work, Monaſticon Anglicanum, containing the charters and muniments of moſt of the houſes of the Benedictine, Cluniac, Ciſtertian, and Carthuſian monks. In A. D. 1661. the ſecond volume was publiſhed, containing charters and donations of lands made to moſt of the houſes of the Auſtin, Gilbertine, and Premonſtratenſian canons, the Trinitarian friers, and the military orders of the Templars and Hoſpitalars[c]. And about A. D. 1673. was publiſhed the third[d] volume relating to cathedral and collegiate churches, with ſeveral deeds relating to the monks and canons of ſome of the houſes mentioned in the firſt and ſecond volumes. But there being probably not many of theſe books printed[e], and a great part of the impreſſion of the third volume being burnt[e], they are now too ſcarce and dear to be of common uſe, and being in Latin are of no ſervice to the Engliſh reader. To remedy which inconvenience, an abridgment of the Monaſticon in Engliſh was publiſhed A. D. 1693[f]. But this being little eſteemed, our author ſhortly after drew up a brief account of theſe houſes, ſetting forth when and by whom they were founded, to whom they were dedicated, of what order their Religious, and of what value their endowments ſeverally were, and publiſhed it A. D. 1695. when he was not twenty two years old. This was ſo favorably received, that within twenty years it became very ſcarce, and was ſeldom to be bought but at auctions, where it bore a conſiderable price. So that at the requeſt of his friends, he began to reviſe and enlarge it, about A. D. 1715. But having the care and good government of a large dioceſe very much at heart, he could ſeldom ſit cloſely to it whilſt he was chancellor of Norwich[g]; and in his latter days his infirmities made him lay it almoſt wholly aſide, and leave it at his death very far from being finiſhed. In ſeveral counties, one place or other was omitted till he could ſee ſome book, or get ſome intelligence he thought needful. Theſe therefore, Peterborough, and ſeven other places in Northamptonſhire, the latter part of Yorkſhire, and all Wales, are of my doing. A great many little notes were left for altering his account of ſeveral houſes according to ſuch better informations as he received, after he was made canon of Chriſt Church in Oxford, and had the uſe of many things there which he could not have elſewhere. I made all thoſe alterations, and was for the moſt part obliged to draw up the account of ſuch houſes anew. I have added ſome references, made extracts of many books that were barely referred to, and would have made more, if I had had, or could have borrow'd, books for it. The author's cloſe writing, and frequent interlineations, obliged me to tranſcribe a great part of the work. The Preface to the firſt edition of this book, with many references and uſeful hints left by the author for improving it, have furniſhed the beſt materials for this Preface. It hath coſt me ſome pains to digeſt and put them into order, and to add as much to them as my few books and little knowledge in theſe affairs enabled me.

[a] So Spelman, Concil. vol. i. p. 215. tho' ſome have aſcribed it to Leland; it is tranſlated into Latin and printed at the end of Harpsfield's Church Hiſtory, and tho' faulty in many places, commended in general.

[b] Which was twenty one years after his deceaſe, as Athen. Oxon. vol. i. p. 235. the title of the book is, Monaſticum Britannicum, or, An hiſtorical narration of the firſt founding and flouriſhing eſtate of the ancient monaſteries, religious rules and orders of Great Britain in the times of the Britains, and primitive church of the Saxons, etc.

[c] The two firſt volumes are ſaid in the title pages to be the work of Roger Dodſworth and William Dugdale; but they were chiefly the work of Dodſworth, for Dugdale did no more towards it, than putting the deeds into method and order, correcting the preſs, and making the Indexes; Dodſworth died in Auguſt 1654. before a tenth part of the firſt volume was printed, and thereby probably loſt the name and credit of the work, which Dugdale obtained by publiſhing it. See Athen. Oxon. vol. ii. Faſti, col. 12. 14. Nicholſon's Hiſt. Library, fol. 144. Hearne's Preface to Willis's Mitred Abbies in Append. to Leland. Collect. p. 78, 79. Hickeſii Epiſt. ad Shower. p. 18.

[d] This was publiſhed in Dugdale's name only; but Mr. Wood thinks he was much indebted to Dodſworth's Collections for it. See Athen. Oxon. and Hiſt. Library in the places laſt cited.

[e e] Dr. Rawlinſon's tranſlation of Freſnoy's Method of ſtudying Hiſtory, vol. ii. p. 484.

[f] There is no name to this work, but it is ſaid to be done by James Wright eſquire author of the Rutlandſhire Antiquities. Athen. Oxon. vol. ii. col. 845.

[g] Eſpecially while he was at Norwich; for he uſed to ſay, he did as much buſineſs for himſelf in his fifty days reſidence at Ely, as he did all the reſt of the year at Norwich.

In this ſecond edition, the reader will find the errors of the firſt corrected, the accounts of the houſes therein mentioned enlarged, and the ſtate of them ſet in a much better light than I believe was ever given of them at one view before; many colleges and collegiate churches are added, of which the author had then no knowlege; and an account is given of all the houſes of friers and hoſpitals, which was before omitted. The references are ſo much augmented, that there ſeems to be very little of any worth relating to theſe houſes, which is not here referr'd to; and that the references might not be ſearch'd in vain, there is for the moſt part a ſhort abſtract of what is to be met with in them, and the greateſt care hath been taken to make the whole correct and uſeful. It is not however to be thought, that there are no miſtakes and omiſſions in this book, that being impoſſible in any work, and eſpecially in ſuch an one as this. I hope there will not be either very many or very great errors found in any part of it, and feweſt in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, which were ſo well known to the author; for a knowlege of the country, as well as ſearching books, is very neceſſary in works of this nature, and therefore ſuch lovers of antiquities in every county, as find the accounts here given of places near them erroneous or defective, are earneſtly deſired, for which they will be ſincerely thank'd by the editor, to ſend their corrections to him, tho', from the many difficulties he had to get the preſent book printed, he thinks it no ways likely to be ever printed again. It muſt indeed be acknowleged, that books of this nature have of late years met with much better reception than they did formerly; and that there have been many things publiſhed upon this ſubject, ſince the author printed his Notitia Monaſtica in A. D. 1695. For A. D. 1715. that indefatigable lover of antiquities Browne Willis eſquire publiſhed, A View of the Mitred Abbies, with a Catalogue of their Reſpective Abbats, in the Appendix to Leland's Collectanea. He republiſhed it enlarged and corrected, A. D. 1718. with an Account of the Conventual Cathedral Churches; and the next year he publiſhed in a ſecond volume in 8vo. a very uſeful Account of moſt of the leſſer Abbies and Priories, with catalogues of many of their abbats and priors. About the ſame time the Monaſticon Anglicanum was publiſhed in one volume in folio, epitomized and tranſlated into Engliſh; and A. D. 1722. John Stevens gent. publiſhed in two volumes in folio, The Hiſtory of the ancient Abbies, Monaſteries, Hoſpitals, Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, with a large collection of Monaſtic deeds and charters, by way of addition to, and completeing of the Monaſticon Anglicanum[a]. So that, however wanting ſomething upon this ſubject might be, when the author firſt wrote upon it, perhaps many may think there is no occaſion for this large book now. But this work being a kind of abſtract and repertory of all the books before mentioned, will be more comprehenſive than any one, and ſupply the place of ſeveral of them, and I hope it will be found to have ſome things in it not in any of the others. It was long ſince begun, and the author's friends thought too well of it to let it be ſuppreſſed.

[a] There have likewiſe been ſome accounts publiſhed of particular places, as of Great Malvern, A. D. 1725. by Dr. Thomas; of Door, by Mr. Gibſon, 1727. and of Feverſham by Mr. Lewis, 1727. and about 1726. was publiſhed Collect. Anglo-minorit. or An account of the ſeveral houſes of friers Minors or Grey friers in England.

I am

I AM afraid, it will not be ſo uſeful as it was intended, becauſe the valuable collection of mſſ. which then belonged to Peter le Neve eſquire, hath been ſome time diſperſed into ſeveral hands; and the much larger and more valuable collection in the Harleyan library is ſoon like to have the ſame fate. The author's collections alſo bound up in volumes marked Willoughby, Jackſon, Appleton, Briſtol, etc. and frequently referred to in the following book, ſuffered in the unfortunate fall of his books into the water, and were thereby ſome of them unbound, and perhaps may not yet be put together again.

I SHALL only add, that the books of precedents ſometimes here referred to, are mſ. books of precedents of ſome eminent civilians which the author purchaſed, and are now with his other mſſ. in the Bodleian library at Oxford: And that I ſhall always acknowledge myſelf under great obligations to the Society for the Encouragement of Learning, and to thoſe worthy perſons who recommended the printing of this book to them; and I hereby deſire their acceptance of my ſincereſt thanks for their favors to me.

NOTES on the foregoing ARMS, and the ARMS of ſome other MONASTERIES.

BEDFORDSHIRE.

I. THUS in the firſt edition; but a learned perſon thinks it ſhould rather be Sable, a pyle in point Argent, an horſeſhoe conjoin'd Or, and interlaced with an annulet of the ſecond pendant. A mſ. of the late Mr. Le Neve's hath the field Gules.

II. According to one mſ. the ſtalks of the pears or wardens ſhould have leaves on them; and I am told that on the ſeal in the Augmentation office, a croſier is ſtruck into the lower pear.

III. See Leland Collect. vol. i. p. 55.

For the arms of Newenham, ſee Madox's Formul. Angl. p. 16.

IV. See Fuller's Church Hiſt. book vi. p. 322. Reyner's Apoſtol. Benedict. tr. i. p. 215.

V. See Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 31. 69. Fuller, p. 322. Reyner, p. 215. but in mſ. Le Neve, beſides three eſcallops in baſe, in chief two mitres.

For the arms of Hurley, ſee Madox's Formul. Angl. p. 250.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

VII. This is the arms of the founder, Elias de Boſco or Bois, as in Dugd. Warwickſhire, edit. 1730. p. 935.

X. See Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 47. but in a mſ. in the Harleyan library, three bars wavy, and the croſier in pale. In a mſ. of Mr. Le Neve's there is a quite different coat for this viz. Argent, a chevron Sable between three cocks Gules, on a chief Azure, a greyhound Or.

For the arms of Mendham, ſee Madox's Formul. p. 360.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

XI. See Reyner, vol. i. p. 217.

XII. See Reyner, vol. i. p. 216. Fuller, p. 323.

CHESHIRE.

XIV. That the croſier ſhould be, not in bend, as in the firſt edition, but in pale, ſee Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 52. and it is placed in the ſiniſter part, becauſe placed there in a mſ. in the Harleyan library.

XV, XVI. See King's Vale Royal, p. .

XVII. Thus Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 53. but I think the borders both of Norton and Vale Royal are omitted in King.

CORNWALL.

XIX. Ex informatione rev. Franc. Blomefield Norfolcienſis.

XX, XXI. Mſ. in muſeo Aſhmol. Oxon. 763. But my friend Mr. Blomfield tells me, Tywardreth bore, Azure, on a chevron Argent, between three torteaux, three Corniſh crows Proper.

St. German's, " The priory is the manſion of Mr. Elliot, in the great hall are the arms of the " priory in the painted glaſs of a large bow window, viz. a ſword and two keys endorſed in Saltire." Magn. Britan. Antiq. et Nov. p. 347. a. It ſeems to be the ſame with Plimpton, the ſecond coat of Bath abby, or the arms of the biſhopric of Wincheſter, and might perhaps formerly be the arms of the biſhop of this dioceſe.

CUMBERLAND.

XXII. The arms of Tho. Percy, as Speed's map of Worceſterſhire; of Percy and Lucy, as Drake's Antq. of York, p. 535.

XXIII. In Mr. Le Neve's mſ. the eſcutcheon in Baſe is not a Fret, but Frettre. The firſt coat is that of Fitzwalter, the ſecond of Lucy.

NOTES ON THE ARMS.

DERBYSHIRE.

xxvi. See Burton's Leiceſterſhire, p. 91. And that this was the arms of the family of Grieſely or Greſley, ſee Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1134. But Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 49. makes the arms of the priory to have been a croſs Formé impaling this coat.

DEVONSHIRE.

xxviii. See Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 80. xxix. xxxiv. Mſ. in muſeo Aſhmol. Oxon. 763.
xxxiii. See Reyner, p. 214. Fuller, p. 321.
Dunkeſwell abby bore two bends Wavy, as the ſeal in the Augmentation office.

DORSETSHIRE.

xxxv. See Reyner, p. 216. xxxvi. See Reyner, p. 214.
xxxvii. Reyner, p. 216. and Fuller, p. 322. xxxix. See Reyner, p. 216.
Bindon abby, as I am informed, bore the arms of the family of Mohun, viz. Or, a croſs engrailed Sable, which will be engraved as one coat of Bruton in Somerſetſhire.

DURHAM.

xl. Reyner, p. 217.

ESSEX.

xliv. Reyner, p. 215. and Fuller, p. 321. The arms aſcribed to this houſe in the firſt edition were, Gules, within a bordure of mullets of ſix points, a croſs Or.
xlvii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 63.
xlviii. Should have a label of three points over all, as Mr. Anſtis.
l. Reyner, p. 215.
li. Fuller, p. 322. where there is alſo mention of another coat, viz. two angels carrying a croſs in alluſion to the legendary ſtory of a croſs found in the weſt, and brought hither by miracle.
The priory of Coggeſhall is ſaid to have had two ſhields, viz. one with the arms of England and France quartered, relating to the founders; and another with three cocks, perhaps in alluſion to the name of the place.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

lii. Mſ. muſeo Aſhmol. Oxon. 13. and a mſ. of Mr. Blomfield. In the firſt edition, it was, Gules, on a chevron Argent three rams heads Sable: But on the authority of thoſe good mſſ. I have ventur'd to alter it.
liii. Reyner, p. 214. Fuller, p. 322. But there is added a ſword palewiſe in one mſ.
liv. The arms of the founder, only an horeſhoe added.
lv. Mſ. muſeo Aſhmol. 13. Reyner, p. 214. Fuller, p. 322.
lvi. Reyner and Fuller; but in Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 599. edit. 1656. and p. 807. edit. 1730. there is another coat for this abby, viz. Azure, on a Saltire Or, a croſs Gules.

HAMPSHIRE.

lvii. In mſ. Le Neve, the border is charged with bezants, and the field is quarterly Argent and Gules. In the Harleyan mſ. and on the ſeal in the Augmentation office, there is no border.
lix. Reyner, p. 215. Fuller, p. 322.
Rumſey bore as Madox, Formul. p. 242.
Twinham or Chriſt Church, as Madox, Formul. Angl. p. 165.

HERTFORDSHIRE.

lxiii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 55. Reyner, p. 216. Fuller, p. 322.
The arms of Flamſted, as I am informed, were Ermine, on a Chief three lions faces.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE.

lxv. Reyner, p. 215. Fuller, p. 323.
lxvi. The arms of Simon Senliz the founder, as Speed's map of Northamptonſhire.

NOTES ON THE ARMS.

KENT.

LXVIII. Reyner, p. 214. LXIX. Reyner, ibid. and Fuller, p. 322. But in mſ. Le Neve, the archiepiſcopal pall is put in the firſt quarter.

LXXII. In Reyner, p. 217. the croſs is Or as well as the faces.

LXXIII. In Reyner, p. 217. three demi ſhips hulls conjoin'd to the demi lyons, and the croſier in the middle.

LANCASHIRE.

LXXVII. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 102. The arms of the founder William Mareſchal earl of Pembroke, as Speed's map of Pembrokeſhire.

LXXVIII, LXXIX. On the ſeal of Furnes abby, there were, as I am informed, three lions Paſſant Guardant, like the arms of England, on either ſide of the patroneſs ſaint, in regard to the founder K. Stephen.

LXXXII. In the Harleyan mſ. the croſiers are turn'd the other way.

The ſeal of Mancheſter college is a book expanded, having a candleſtick with a lighted candle in it, above the book; on the leaves of the book theſe words; "Lucerna pedibus meis verbum tuum, et lumen ſemitis meis." Pſal. cxix.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

LXXXIII. Burton's Leiceſterſhire, p. 64. In Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 72. the lion only, being the arms of Mowbray the founder. On the ſeal, the lion on one ſide, and the croſs, as a counter ſeal, on the other.

LXXXIV. From mſ. Le Neve. LXXXV. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 100. The founder's arms, with a croſier added to diſtinguiſh it from Leiceſter St. Mary.

LXXXVI. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 72. The arms of R. Beler the founder, as Thoroton's Nottinghamſhire, p. 302. plate 2.

LXXXVII. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 72. Burton's Leiceſter, p. 22. the arms of Baſſet of Weldon. In mſ. Le Neve a croſier Argent bendwiſe over all, to diſtinguiſh it from the founder's arms.

LXXXVIII. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 73. LXXXIX. part of the arms of John of Gaunt, the chief founder, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1124.

XC. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 72. XCI. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 74. The arms of Roger de Quinci, as Thoroton's Nottinghamſhire, plate 1.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

XCIII. Reyner, p. 215. Fuller, p. 323. But in mſ. muſeo Aſhmol. 763. there is another coat, viz. Gules, a croſs Floré Or, within a border Azure enaluron of nine croſs croſslets Argent.

XCIV. In the Harleyan mſ. there is a croſier inſtead of the pilgrim's ſtaff.

XCV. In the Harleyan mſ. the arms of Mortimer in three ſhields, having between the two uppermoſt a paſtoral ſtaff, are ſaid to have been the arms of this abby.

The arms of Barlings, were a dexter hand graſping a croſier[a].

The arms of Bardney, were, "a croſs Patée between four lions, being the arms of Oſwald "king of Northumberland, to whoſe honor this abby was dedicated. The ſame arms are "alſo uſed by the ſee of Durham[b]."

LONDON and MIDDLESEX.

XCVII, XCVIII. were both aſcribed to the priory in the firſt edition; but are aſcribed thus by Mr. Anſtis, CII. Elſing Spittle is ſaid to have likewiſe born, Gules, three flower de liz on a bend between two cottiſes, Or.

CIII. Thus in the firſt edition, but Mr. Fuller ſaith, "The prior of St. John of Jeruſalem gave "Gules, a croſs Argent, which the lord prior ſometimes impaled with (but before) his own "coat, and ſometimes bare it a chief above it[c]. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 106. hath the ſame arms with Fuller.

CVII. Leland, Collect. vol. i. p. 106. makes Gules a croſs Argent to have been alſo the arms of the Templars: And Gules a croſs Argent is found in Balſhal church, etc. in Warwickſhire, as Dugd. Warwic. p. 969. But that was probably put up by the Hoſpitalars when they put up their lord prior Weſton's arms there.

cxi. Leland. Collect. vol. i. 100. cxi. Reyner, p. 217. Fuller, p. 322.

London Bethleem, as John Anſtis eſquire Garter inform'd the author, bore, Argent, two bars Sable, a label of three points Gules, on a chief Azure, a comet with ten rays Or, oppreſſed with a torteaux Gules, charged with a plain croſs of the firſt, between a chalice Or, with an hoſty Argent, and a baſket of the ſame.

Syon, bore a plain croſs [a], but I know not the colours.

NORFOLK.

cxv. Beſides the arms engraven, Mr. Blomfield ſaith, he hath alſo ſeen, "Argent, a croſs Gules upon a pedeſtal of three ſteps with a greater and leſſer tranſverſe at top," uſed as the arms of this houſe, with relation probably to the holy croſs of Bromholme; and in a mſ. of Mr. Le Neve's there is given as the arms of this houſe, Argent, a croſs Sable fimbriated Or, upon a pedeſtal of one ſtep, within a border Or.

cxvi. The croſs chequie Or and Azure relates to the founder's arms.

cxvii. The lower head is only pierced with a croſier in mſ. Dodſworth. 161.

cxviii. Thus Reyner, p. 214. Fuller, p. 323. But Mr. Blomfield ſaith, theſe arms want "an hand from a cloud iſſuing ſometimes from the dexter chief corner and ſometimes from the ſiniſter; for in all the old ſtone carving, the hand is always inſerted in one of thoſe places."

cxx. The dean of Norwich bears this coat now, and Mr. Blomfield aſſures me, the prior bore it formerly.

cxxii. See Mr. Blomfield's Norfolk, vol. i. p. 448.

cxxiii. In Mr. Blomfield's Hiſt. of Norfolk, vol. i. p. 745. ſee the ſeal of this houſe, on one ſide of which are theſe arms of earl Warren their founder, and on the other ſide, a creſcent and ſtar, being a badge given to them, who had ſerved in the Holy Land [b], as William third earl of Warren did [c].

cxxiv. The arms of Shardelow the founder. See Blomfield, vol. i. p. 103. 628.

cxxviii. For the arms of Holand and Penwortham in Lancaſhire, and thoſe of Caſtleacre and Wendling in Norfolk, I am indebted to the rev. Mr. Parkins of Oxborough in Norfolk.

Bromhill. See the ſeal of this convent, in Blomfield's Norfolk, vol. i. p. 479.

Buckenham. The arms of this priory are ſaid by Mr. Blomfield, Hiſt. of Norfolk, p. 264. to have been three eſcallops, but in the draught which he hath there given us of the ſeal, I obſerve there are the arms of Albini the founder on one ſide, and Tateſhall a great benefactor [d] on the other.

Carbrooke, bore the head of St. John Baptiſt [e].

Langely, bore a paſtoral ſtaff, with a hand iſſuing from either ſide of the ſhield, and holding a ſword [e].

Lynn priory bore the ſame, which are now uſed by the town [e].

Ruſhworth, on a bend three torteaux or ſomething like them [f].

Thetford nunnery. The ſeal was St. George killing the dragon, with his croſs in a ſhield on his right ſide [g].

NOTES ON THE ARMS.

cxxxvi. Mſ. Le Neve and Harleyan mſ.

cxxxvii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 49. Beſides theſe two coats for Workſop, I have met with another, viz. Argent, a bend Gules between ſix martlets of the ſame[a], over all a croſier Or.

The ſeal of the friers Carmelites at Nottingham had on it a Religious kneeling before the Virgin Mary, and holding up an eſcutcheon, whereon were three bars with a label of three points in chief.

Rufford is ſaid to have born the lord Beaumont's arms, viz. Azure, a lyon rampant, with flower de lis Or. But quaere.

OXFORDSHIRE.

cxxxix. The arms of Rob. D'oilly the founder. In biſhop Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 345. the ſeal of this abby is ſaid to have been, "the Virgin Mary ſitting with our Saviour in her "arms, and underneath an ox."

cxl. In the firſt edition, this coat was Sable, a feſſe Argent, in chief three demi nuns veiled, in baſe an ox paſſing a ford, as generally on the ſeals of the biſhops of Oxford. The preſent alteration is owing to a letter of Mr. Anſtis's. There is no feſſe in Reyner, p. 217.

SHROPSHIRE.

cxliii. Reyner, p. 215. Fuller, p. 223. In the firſt edition; the border and lyon were Gules; but they are both Or in Reyner and Fuller, and in the arms of Roger Montgomery the founder in Speeds map of Shropſhire.

cxliv. Willis's Abbies, vol. ii. p. 193.

Battlefield coll. bore, a chevron indented between three cocks[b].

SOMERSETSHIRE.

cxlv. Reyner, p. 217.

cxlvii, cxlviii. Both theſe coats were uſed by the family de Mohun who refounded this houſe; ſee Speed's map of Somerſetſhire, and Dugd. Warwickſhire, edit. 1730. p. 587.

cxlix. Reyner, p. 216. Fuller, p. 321. But in mſ. muſ. Aſhmol. 13. the croſs is plain. In mſ. Le Neve, it is Botony, as here, but with a crown in the ſecond, third, and fourth quarter. In the Harleyan mſ. the croſs is Flory.

Athelney bore two coats impaled, viz. the dexter part, a bend between two crowns above, and one beneath; the ſiniſter part, quarterly; firſt, three crowns in pale; ſecond, a croſs; third as the ſecond; fourth as the firſt[c].

Keynſham, ſeven wreſts[d].

STAFFORDSHIRE.

cli. The arms of Wulfric Spot the founder; ſee Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 27. Reyner, p. 217. and Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1128.

clii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 72.

cliv, clv. for the firſt coat ſee Leland Collect. vol. i. p. 46. for the ſecond (which is the coat of Ferrers earl of Derby, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 905.) ſee Burton's Leiceſterſhire, p. 96. On the ſeal, they are empaled.

SUFFOLK.

clvi. Three crowns without arrows, in Reyner, p. 214. and Fuller, p. 322. And ſo the abby at firſt certainly bore them. But for above an hundred[e] years before the diſſolution, it conſtantly bore them with arrows. In Rice's Suffolk collections mſ. there is another coat aſcribed to this abby, which perhaps might be the arms or ſeal of one of the greater obedientaries, viz. Azure, three pair of keys adorſed in triangle, Or.

clvii. The arms of Glanvile the founder, in mſ. Le Neve there is added a croſier bendwiſe.

Ipſwich Trinity priory bore, "Azure, a Trinity Argent." Gipp's Suffolk Collections mſ. Probably the ſame arms as thoſe of London Trinity or Chriſt Church priory.

[a] The arms of Furnival, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1128.

[b] Mr. Loxdale from the ſeal.

[c] From the ſeal in the Augmentation office.

[d] Mr. Willis from the ſeal.

[e] Mr. Blomfield ſaith from the time of K. Henry 6. but, I believe, much earlier from many ſingle crowns pierced with arrows upon the church of Beccles in Suffolk, which the abbat and convent of Bury were patrons of, and, I believe, is as old as the reign of K. Richard 2.

NOTES ON THE ARMS.

SURREY.

clx. Mſ. Le Neve. clxii. Reyner, p. 216. clxiii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 70, Mſ. Le Neve.

clxvi. Thus in the firſt edition; but Mr. Anſtis thinks, that inſtead of the mounds, there ſhould be two ſwords in Pale, on both ſides of the mitre.

clxvii. Reyner, p. 215. Fuller, p. 322. and Mr. Le Neve hath the ſame, ſave that inſtead of the old letter in the middle of the croſs he hath a mitre.

WARWICKSHIRE.

clxviii. Leland. vol. i. p. 50. It is the arms of Baſſet of Drayton, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1000. edit. 1730.

clxix, clxx. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 50. the former is the arms of Clinton earl of Huntingdon, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 668. 1000. The latter of Clinton of Maxſtoke, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1000. 1002. Sr. William de Clinton was founder.

clxxi. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 51. The arms of Ferrers earl of Derby and Nottingham, as Speed's map of Nottinghamſhire.

clxxii. See Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 1115. clxxiii. Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 813.

Comb bore three lions of England, with a label of five points, as Speed's catal. of Religious houſes. But quaere; for the arms of Camvil the founder were Azure, two lions paſſant Argent, as Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 807. 1128.

The arms of Coventry, tho' a parliamentary priory, I can't meet with. Fuller ſaith, Dugdale told him, there were no arms upon the priory ſeal. Church Hiſt. book vi. p. 322.

WILTSHIRE.

A print of the ſeal of St. Edmund's college in Sarum is publiſhed in the ſecond Appendix to Leland's Collect. p. 283. and in the Engliſh Topographer, p. 247. On one ſide of the patron ſaint, there is a ſhield of three eſtoiles or comets of twelve rays each. And on the other ſide, a ſhield with a chevron between three caſtles. Perhaps the arms both of the founder or founders, and of the college, as thoſe upon ſeals generally were.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

clxxvii. Dugd. Warwickſhire, p. 807. In the Harleyan mſ. inſtead of the chain in chevron faſhion, a ſtirrup in feſſe point and faſhion [a].

Perſhore. Sable on a chevron between three anthills Or, (each hill having on it four ants proper) three holly leaves Azure [b].

clxxx. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 54. clxxxi. Reyner, p. 216. clxxxvi. Append. ad Regiſtr. hon. de Richmond, p. 254. There was a ſecond coat for this abby, in the firſt edition, viz. Gules a croſs Argent, between four lions Argent, being the ſame with Noſtel, except that the croſs and lions of the latter are Or. cxc. Inſtead of the pilgrim's ſtaff, one ſaith a ſcepter in pale. cxcii. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 39. cxciv. The arms of Bulmer the founder, as Drake's Antiq. of York, p. 535. cxcix. The croſs and lions in St. Oſwald's arms are Argent; whether thoſe in this coat ought to be ſo, or were made Or for diſtinction's ſake, I can't ſay.

cci. The arms of Roald the founder, with the addition of a croſier, as Regiſtr. hon. de Richmond, p. 81. 83.

ccii. The arms of Meynil, with the like addition, as Drake's Antiq. of York, p. 535.

ccv. Are the old arms of Percy the founder, as Drake, p. 535.

ccvi. Reyner, p. 216. Fuller, p. 323. But my good friend Mr. Willis tells me there is another coat for this abby in the Harleyan mſ. viz. a miter with a croſier paſſing thro' it, as in the ſecond coat for Bermondſey.

ccvii. Reyner, p. 216. ccviii. Drake's Appendix, p. ci.

[a] This difference and ſeveral others were kindly communicated by Brown Willis eſquire, who peruſed the Harleyan mſ. on this occaſion.

[b] Ex informatione rev. Franciſci Blomfield Norfolcienſis.

NOTES ON THE ARMS.

Beverley bore Argent, a paſtoral ſtaff Sable, paſſing thro' a crown proper, with a bordure Sable bezanted[c].

Jervaux bore quarterly, 1. Three water bougets. 2. Three bars within a bordure engrailed. 3. In chief a bar; in baſe three braces. 4. Vayre Argent and Azure a feſſe gules[d].

York, Holy Trinity, a cinque foyle[d].

Warter, the arms of this houſe, as engraved in the firſt edition, were exactly the ſame with thoſe of Kirkham, and therefore now omitted. But Mr. Willis tells me, theſe arms ought to be gules, three water bougets in pale Argent, over all a croſs Or.

WALES.

ccx. Ex collect. autoris.
ccxi. Ex informatione magiſtri Willis.

Mr. Burton ſaith[e], that the arms of monaſteries were generally the ſame with the arms of their founders or very near them, and the reader hath here a great many inſtances of it; but it may be neceſſary to obſerve, that as the Religious acknowledged ſometimes a ſecond or third founder, ſo they ſeem to have many times uſed the arms of ſuch later founder, and not thoſe of the firſt, and ſometimes to have put both of them upon their ſeals, and to have impaled them in their arms. The latter arms of ſome of theſe houſes being manifeſtly different from thoſe they firſt uſed.

The author had moſt of the arms publiſhed in the firſt edition of this book, from an ancient mſ. in the Muſeum Aſhmoleanum at Oxford. I have ſupported ſeveral of them with other authorities; and put down my authorities for all the arms I have added or altered. Such as have no reference to ſupport them reſt upon the authority of the firſt edition.

The ſeals of many Religious houſes had nothing on them, but the image of their patron ſaint, which Mat. Paris ſaith[f] was required “ob majorem reverentiam.” Sometimes the founders were drawn upon the ſeals kneeling and praying to the patron ſaint, and had their arms either over their heads[g], or underneath[h]. Mat. Paris ſpeaks of breaking the ſeal of the abby of St. Alban's upon the death of abbat John, who died A. D. 1214. and abbat William, who died A. D. 1235. The ſeal or ſeals ſeem generally to have been in the abbat's cuſtody; and therefore the Monaſticon ſpeaking of an abbat of Hailes's being deprived, ſaith, the ſeals were thereupon taken from him[i]; but the ſeal of Battlefield college was ordered to be kept in a cheſt with three locks, the key of one to be in the patron's hand, the key of another to be in the maſter's hands, and the key of the other to be kept by one of the chaplains[k].

A CATALOGUE of the Greater MONASTERIES.

NOTE that by the act 27 Hen. 8. cap. 28. for diſſolving the leſſer monaſteries, "All and "ſingular ſuch monaſteries[g], priories, and other Religious houſes of monks, canons, and "nuns[h], of what kinds of diverſities of habits, rules, or order ſoever they be called or named, "which have not in lands, tenements, rents, tithes, portions, or other hereditaments above the "clear yearly value of two hundred pound" were diſſolved. So that ſuch houſes only are to be accounted greater monaſteries which had 200 l. per ann. according to Dugdale's or the clear valuation. And they are in [g] See Statutes at large, vol. i. p. 815.

[h] Houſes of friers being not named in this act, they continued till the fall of the greater houſes; and it hath been argued, that, if the love of money had been the only cauſe of putting down the Religious orders, the friers would have been ſpared. For, except the Trinitarians and ſome few others, they had ſcarce revenues enough to keep their houſes in repair.

[i] I don't put down the valuations, becauſe they may be eaſily found in the following Work.

[k] This and Edindon in Wiltſhire were Houſes of Regulars within the meaning of 31 Hen. 8. chap. xiii. tho' generally called Colleges.

[l] Omitted in the catalogues of Sr. Simon Degge, Dr. Watſon, and biſhop Gibſon.

[m] Dugdale having by miſtaking the figure made the valuation of this houſe 118 l. only inſtead of 518 l. per ann. it had not till now a place amongſt the greater monaſteries.

[n] In Devonſhire, the name of Buckland abby, and the valuation of Plimpton, are omitted in D. W. and G's catalogues. Plimpton is put down, but inſtead of its own valuation, hath that of Buckland put to it. Exeter St. James, a Cluniac priory is put in, which was ſeiſed as alien, and given away by K. Henry 6.

[o] The value of this houſe is 538 l. only in W. and G. inſtead of 578 l.

[p] For Tinmouth generally placed here, ſee NORTHUMBERLAND.

[q] Omitted in D. W. and G.

[r] Briſtol, St. Auſtin's and Kingſwood are often placed in this county. See the former at the end of Somerſetſhire, and the latter in Wiltſhire. Glocester, St. Peter is valued in D. W. and G. at 514 l. per ann. more than in this book.

[s] This was a cell only to Reading, and hath no valuation in Dugdale or Speed; but having actually a great revenue, I have put it amongſt the greater monaſteries; however with a quaere, becauſe perhaps the 448 l. paid from it yearly to Reading, might be reckoned amongſt the revenues of Reading, and it might not have 200 l. per ann. clear after that payment.

[t] Omitted in D. W. and G.

[v] This is often placed in Yorkſhire or Richmondſhire.

[x] Omitted in D. W. and G.

[y] I have put St. John's of Jeruſalem at the end.

[z z] Theſe two are twice put down in D. W. and G. The firſt by the names of "London, a houſe of Carthu- "ſians founded in the time of K. Edward 3." with Dugdale's valuation; and "St. Mary Charterhouſe, Carthuſians founded in the year 1379." with Speed's valuation. The latter, by the names of "London Minors, Benedic- "tines founded in the time of K. Edward 1." with Dugdale's valuation. And "St. Clare without Aldgate, Mo- "niales, founded in the year 1292." with Speed's valuation.

[a] Moſt of the eſtates of this abby (if not all of them) were ſettled by act of parliament upon the biſhop of Norwich in exchange for ſome eſtates of the biſhopric, in the ſame ſeſſions, which paſſed the act for diſſolving the leſſer monaſteries.

[b] Omitted in D. W. and G.

[c] Put in twice in D. W. and G. In Durham, with Dugdale's valuation, and here with Speed's.

[d] Beſides theſe four, D. W. and G. have St. Frideſwide's Oxon. which was diſſolved A. D. 1524. And Dorcheſter, with Speed's valuation; Dugdale hath no valuation of it. But in Stevens and the mſ. Valor the clear ſum is no more than 190 l. 2 s. 6 d q per ann.

[e] Athelney and Montacute are omitted in D. W. and G.

[f] In D. W. and G. Croxden is added, which had not 100 l. per ann. clear. But the lands of it have been adjudged to be tithe free, becauſe it was continued by king Henry 8. See Degge, p. ii. cap. 21. Watſon, chap. xlviii. and biſhop Gibſon's Codex, p. 1227.

[g] This abby, and all the eſtates belonging to it, were ſold by the abbat and convent two years before the act for diſſolving the greater monaſteries.

[h] Ixworth is added in D. W. and G. with Speed's miſtaken valuation of 280 l. 9 s. 5 d. whereas the whole ſum was really no more than 204 l 9 s. 5 d. and the clear ſum only 168 l. 19 s. 7 d ob. q.

[l] Farleigh and Lacock are added with Speed's valuation in D. W. and G. whereas in Dugdale Farleigh is only 153 l. 14 s. 2 d. ob. and Lacock 168 l. 9 s. 2 d.

[m] Omitted in D. W. and G. who have Hales Owen (as Dugdale and Speed alſo have) both in Shropſhire and Worceſterſhire.

[n] D. W. and G. have alſo Hull Chartreuſe houſe, Warter, and old Malton, whereas in Dugdale the firſt is valued at 174 l. 18 s. 3 d. the ſecond at 143 l. 7 s. 8 d. and the third at 197 l. 19 s. 2 d. They have alſo Rithal 351 l. 14 s. 6 d. which is the total valuation of Rivaulx before inſerted with Dugdale's valuation. Val Crucis in Denbighſhire is likewiſe put in with Speed's valuation, tho' valued in Dugdale at 188 l. 8 s. 0 d. only. And Stratflour in Cardiganſhire (probably from the figures not diſtinctly placed in Speed) is made 1226 l. 6 s. 0 d. per ann. in D. W. and G. whereas the ſum total is no more than 122 l. 6 s. 8 d. and the clear ſum only 118 l. 7 s. 3 d.

NOTITIA MONASTICA;

OR AN

ACCOUNT

Of all the

ABBIES, PRIORIES, and HOUSES of FRIERS,

Formerly in ENGLAND and WALES.

BEDFORDSHIRE.

BEDFORD olim Bedanford.

HERE ſeems to have been a monaſtery pretty early in the Saxon times[a]. But who was founder, to what ſaint it was dedicated, or when and by whom it was deſtroyed, I have not yet met with any account.

Before the conqueſt alſo there was a college of prebendaries in the church of St. Paul[b] here, who were changed[c] into Regular canons by Roiſe, wife of Pain Beauchamp, temp. Hen. 2. and by their ſon Symon de Beauchamp removed almoſt a mile down the river to a place afterward called Newenham[d].

Vide in Mon. Angl. tom. ii. 238, 239. quaedam de ſundatione et tranſlatione canonicorum ex Lelandi Collect. vol. iii. p. 12. edit. Hearn. ex Itin. vol. i. p. 90. edit. Hearn.

Lelandi Itin. vol. viii. p. 59.

Hiſt. Elienſis lib. ii. in capit. de Fordham. edit. Gale, p. 481.

ELSTOW olim Heleneſtow[e], Elnſtowe, or Alneſtowe.

Here was an abbey of Benedictine nuns, founded, temp. Will. 1. by Judith, niece to the conqueror, and wife to Waltheof earl of Huntingdon, to the honor of the Holy Trinity, St. Mary, and St. Helen. It was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 284*l.* 12*ſ.* 11*d. ob. q. per ann.* Dugd.

[a] Chron. Saxon. in anno DCCCCLXX. Leland, Collect. vol. iii. p. 81. out of a mſ. in Merton college library, mentions the monaſtery of Bedanford near the river Ouze, as the place, where the body of St. Ethelbert was preſerved, tho' moſt of our other hiſtorians and writers of ſaints lives (ſee Capgrave in vita S. Ethelberti, Lelandi Coll. i. 210. ii. 331.) with more probability report that holy king to have been enſhrined at Hereford. And that paſſage is the more to be ſuſpected, becauſe 'tis omitted in the Saxon account of the burial places of our Engliſh ſaints, publiſhed, with the notes of the late learned Dr. Hopkins, in both editions of Dr. Hickes's Saxon Grammar, which for the moſt part agrees with that Merton mſ. Perhaps Ethelbert's name is there put for king Offa's, who was buried here at Bedford (ſee Matth. Weſtm. in an. DCCXCVII. and Matth. Paris in vita Offae ii. p. 987.) and this monaſtery was the church at Bedford, for which he deſigned the ſeveral donations mentioned Spelm. Conc. t. i. p. 319.

[b] Not the preſent church of that name, but an old church near the caſtle, pulled down, temp. R. Joannis, in order to enlarge the fortifications: See Matth. Paris in an. MCCXXIV. and Mon. Angl. ii. 240.

[c] That the Seculars were here A. D. 1164. ſee Matth. Paris, p. 85 of Phil. Broc, canon of Bedford's being then deprived of his prebend.

[d] Yet there ſeem to have been ſome religious here as late as A. D. 1240. For in that year the cuſtos Sancti Pauli Bedford is named one of the pope's ſubdelegates in a cauſe between the canons of Oſney and the rector of Bix. Regiſtr. Oſney, f. 134

[e] Heleſtow in Berkſhire is put for this in Bedfordſhire, in the Monaſticon, i. 359.

325 l. 2 s. 1 d. ob. q. Speed; and here were twenty one nuns[g], beſides the abbeſs, at the diſſolution. The ſite was granted, 7 Ed. 6. to ſir Humphry Radclyff.

MULEBROC or Mylbrook.

Here was a ſmall cell of Benedictine monks belonging to St. Albans, who were removed [d] by abbat Geffrey to the hermitage of Moddry, ſometime called Beaulieu or De bello loco, which was given to that abby by Robert de Albini, and his mother Cecily, about A. D. 1140. and from that time became a priory ſubordinate [e] to S. Alban's, till abbat Whethamſted, [f] by virtue of a bull from pope Eugenius 4. ſuppreſſed it, and united it to the abbey; St. Mary Magdalen was the ſaint of this place.

[b] The annals of Norwich cited in the Monaſt. make this abbey to have been founded in 1136. Leland, Collect. i. 56. iii. 73. puts it in 1138. but K. Stephen's charter of confirmation is dated anno regni primo et Domini 1135.

MERGATE or Markyate, now Market-Street.[b]

In a wood near this place, within the pariſh of Caddington, was a nunnery[c] of the Benedictine order, dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Ralph the dean, and the chapter of St. Paul's, London, lords of the ſoil, gave the ſite and ſome adjoining lands, A. D. 1145. but the buildings and endowment were chiefly owing to the care and bounty of Geffrey abbat of St. Albans[d]. This priory was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 114 l. 16 s. 1 d. per ann. Dugd. 143 l. 18 s. 3 d. Speed, and was granted, 2 Ed. 6. to Geo. Ferrers[e].

[a] Iſabel, daughter to Hugh viſcount Bolebec, was foundreſs of Woburn, according to Leland's Itinerary, vol. vi. p. 44. but the charters in the Monaſt. are more to be depended on.

[b] Tho' this hamlet be partly in Bedfordſhire, and partly in Hertfordſhire, yet the priory was in the former, (as Pat. 2 Ed. 6. p. . .) notwithſtanding Sir H. Chauncy.

[c] Mr. Speed mentions another nunnery at Merkyate, built 6 Ed. 1. by Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloceſter, to the honor of St. Giles; but this, I conceive, is the ſame with De boſco juxta Flamſted, not far from Merkyate, but in Hertfordſhire.

[d] In the firſt Edition following the Monaſticon, i. 350. this nunnery was ſaid to have been a cell to St. Alban's, but without good authority; for what ſubjection was paid, was to the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, (as Monaſt. ii. 872.) and from them as founders or patrons, they had licence upon a vacancy to elect a new prioreſs. HARWOLDE or Harwood.

Here was a ſmall priory built, temp. Steph. to the honor of St. Peter, firſt both for canons and nuns according to the inſtitution of St. Nicolas of Arrouaſia, but afterward it conſiſted only of a prioreſs and three or four nuns of the order of St. Auſtin [c]. Sampſon le Forte is ſaid to have been the founder [d] of this religious houſe, whoſe lands were rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 47 l. 3 s. 2 d. per ann. Speed. But the clear ſum of its yearly value, omitted in the Monaſticon, was [e] 40 l. 18 s. 2 d. The ſite was granted, 35 Hen. 8. to William lord Parr; and, 2 Mariae, to John Cheney and Richard Duncomb.

[a] Mr. Speed places the foundation of this monaſtery, temp. Will. 1. and in the firſt edition of this book it was ſaid to be temp. Hen 1. but it could not be ſo early, becauſe the Sempringham order did not begin till K. Stephen's time, and lady Roais could not be married to Pain Beauchamp till after A. D. 1148. when (Mon. Angl. i. 448, 450.) her firſt huſband Mandevil died; and Henry archbiſhop of York is one of the witneſſes to the foundation charter, who was not conſecrated till A. D. 1147.

BERKSHIRE.

ABINGDON.

AN ABBY of five hundred monks is ſaid[a] to have been here in the time of the Britains, or Romans, wherein Conſtantine the Great had his education; but it is more certain, that pretty early in the Saxon times, a ſmall[b] monaſtery was founded in Bagley wood, upon a hill called Abendune, two miles nearer Oxford than the preſent town of that name, near Bayworth[c] or Chilſwell[d], by Ciſſa[e] viceroy of Wiltſhire, and great part of Berkſhire, under Kentwin king of the Weſt Saxons, about the year of Chriſt 675, at the requeſt of a nephew of his, called Heane, who became the firſt abbat. But the monaſtery, not proſpering there, was five years after removed to a place lower down upon the river of Thames, then named Sevekiſham, ſince Abingdon, where it was built and endowed to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, by the endeavours and ſolicitation of the ſaid Heane, and the munificence of Cedwalla and Ina kings of the Weſt Saxons, and other benefactors. This religious houſe being deſtroyed in the Daniſh wars, was, A. D. 955. reſtored by the care of Ethelwold its abbat, who was afterwards biſhop of Wincheſter, and the bounty of K. Edred and K. Edgar. The monks here were of the order of St. Benedict, and their revenues were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 1876 l. 10 s. 9 d. per ann. according to the clear valuation printed by Sir William Dugdale, at the end of the firſt volume of the Monaſticon; but, according to the groſs valuation in Mr. Speed, at 2042 l. 2 s. 8 d. ob. q. per ann. The ſite of this abby was granted, 1 Ed. 6. to Sr. Tho. Seimor, and, 5 Ed. 6. to Sr. Tho. Wroth.

HELENSTOW[a].

On or near the place where the pariſh church, [b] or hoſpital, [c] of St. Helen in Abingdon afterward ſtood, was a nunnery built by Ciſſa, or Cilla, ſiſter to abbat Heane, and niece to Ciſſa the founder of the monaſtery, about A. D. 690. But after the death of Ciſſa, the foundreſs and firſt abbeſs, the nuns removed higher up the Thames to

WITTEHAM or Wytham,

Where they continued till the wars between Offa king of the Mercians, and Kinewulf king of the Weſt Saxons, about the year 780. when, this being a frontier town and made a garriſon, the convent broke up, and retired to other religious houſes, and never returned more hither.

A monastery was built here by K. Ina before A. D. 699. as he himſelf tells us[d], in his charter of that date to Abingdon, in Mon. Angl. Vol. i. p. 100.

SUNNING.

When Wiltſhire, if not Berkſhire alſo, was ſeparated from the biſhopric of Sherborn, about A. D. 905, and made a diſtinct dioceſe, this place is ſaid to have been one of the ſeats of the biſhops of that new erected ſee; which was again united to Sherborn about A. D. 1060. But Quaere.

READING.

Here was in the Saxon times a nunnery, ſaid by Leland[f], and from him by Camden and Speed[g], to have been built by K. Edward the martyr's mother in law, Q. Elfrida, for penance; and to have been, as the conſtant fame was, where St. Mary's pariſh church now is. But afterward Leland makes a query, "Whether the old nunnery ſtood not in the place wher" "the abbay of Readyng ſtondith? and whither St. Maries were not of a newer foundation?" This makes it probable, that there were two old nunneries in Reading, one (where the abby after was) deſtroyed, and the lands alienated, long before the time of K. Henry 1[h]. and the other, either where St. Mary's church now is, or in ſome other part of the town, which was in being almoſt one hundred years after the foundation of the abby; as evidently appears from Edgar, to expiate her contriving the murder of her ſon in law K. Edward, A. D. 979. yet they are altogether ſilent as to this of Reading. Indeed Malmſbury reports, that K. Here was one of the three old monaſteries referred to in king Henry 1ſt's foundation charter of the abby of Reading, as having been long before deſtroyed [a], which perhaps happened to this when the Danes, in their irruption into Berkſhire, A. D. 1006 [b], burnt Reading, Walingford, "Ceoleſiam, vicoſque, [not viroſque] quamplures;" as in Hoveden, edit. Francofurt. 1601. fol. p. 430. It was founded by K. Etheldred about the year 986, to make ſome attonement for the murder of his brother K. Edward the martyr [c]. The manor and impropriation of Cholſey belonged to the abby of Reading till the general diſſolution, when there was a fine country houſe here, called The abbot of Reading's place, which by that name was granted to Sr. Francis Englefield, 4 et 5 Phil. et Mariae.

WALLINGFORD olim Warengford, and corruptly Waring [e].

The church of the Holy Trinity, within the Weſtgate [f] here, being given, temp. Will. Conq. to the abby of St. Alban's, by Galfridus Camerarius [g], Paul the 14th abbat ſent hither a convent of their Black monks, who with their prior were ſubordinate to that great monaſtery. The yearly revenue of this cell is not to be found in the valuations of the religious houſes, 26 Hen. 8. becauſe cardinal Wolſey, commendatory abbat of St. Alban's, had before that time procured the pope's bull for the diſſolving of this with other ſmall monaſteries, and had their lands beſtowed on him by the king, 20 Hen. 8. with intent that he ſhould ſettle the ſame on the famous new college he was about to build in Oxford. But by the forfeiture of that cardinal, that noble deſign was left unfiniſhed, and this priory, with his other lands, came again to the crown; from whence it was granted, 38 Hen. 8. to John Norres.

About the year of our Lord 1170. Nicolas de Stotevile founded the abby of Vallemont, or de Valido Monte in Normandy, to which, among many other endowments, he gave the church of Stratfeld[h], and a ſolitary place near it, dedicated to St. Leonard, wherein were fixed a prior and ſome Benedictine monks of that foreign houſe, to look after their eſtates here in England. Upon the ſuppreſſion of the alien priories, this was granted to Eton college, 1 Ed. 4.

About the year of our Lord 1190. Hugh the eighth abbat founded, without the gate of the monaſtery, an hoſpital for twenty ſix poor people, and the entertainment of ſtrangers and pilgrims paſſing that great weſtern road, and obtained the church of St. Laurence in this town, to be appropriated toward the better ſupport of it.

[b] It ſeems moſt probable, that the bull in Mr. Rymer, vol. i. p. 59. was of pope Alexander 3. becauſe this priory is mentioned in Gervaſe of Cant. who lived temp. Joannis, and was in being in that king's reign, as appears by the pleadings in the Year Books.

SANDLEFORD[a], or Newtoun[b], near Newbury.

JEFFREY earl of Perch, and Maud his wife, before A. D. 1205. founded a priory here for canons of the order of St. Auſtin, which was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John Baptiſt. About the year 1480. the religious wholly forſook this little monaſtery, whereupon K. Edw. 4. with the conſent, and at the inſtance of the ordinary of the place, Richard Beauchamp biſhop of Saliſbury, and then dean of Windſor, annexed it to the collegiate church of Windſor[c]. It is valued at 10 l. per ann. among the poſſeſſions of Windſor, 26 Hen. 8[d].

HAMME.

MR. SPEED mentions, at a place of this name in this county, a monaſtery of Black nuns, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, which he had out of the catalogue of religious houſes, aſcribed to Gervaſe of Canterbury[e]; and if ſo, muſt be as old as K. John's reign. But any farther account of this religious houſe hath not yet occurr'd either in the records, or any other good authority.

NEWBURY.

THE hoſpital here, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is thought to have been founded by K. John, who granted a fair on St. Bartholomew's day for the benefit of it. It was formerly under the government of a warden, maſter, or prior[f]; but, having eſcaped the diſſolution in K. Edward 6's time, it is now under the care and management of the corporation, who have lately rebuilt the houſes, and allow each of the ſix men and ſix women inhabiting them, 2 s. 6 d. per week, beſides 4 s. each on the fair day, 13 s. 4 d. at Chriſtmas, one hundred faggots yearly, and a new coat or gown every two years.

Henry 6. So that before the diſſolution its yearly income was valued at 147 l. 8 s. ob.[k]

[c] The remains of this place are now called The Priory: It was endowed with one carucate of land, two acres of meadow, ſix cottages, (which were of the yearly rent of xl s. A. D. 1405.) and the oblations offered upon the feaſt of St. John Baptiſt. The prior or warden was to celebrate divine ſervice thrice in a week, and to relieve the poor inhabitants of the town in times of ſcarcity. The duke of Lancaſter was patron. Ex informatione rev. T. WINDSOR.

In the caſtle here was an old free chapel dedicated to K. Edward the Confeſſor, in which King Henry 1. placed eight Secular prieſts, who ſeem never to have been incorporated nor endowed with lands, but to have been maintained by penſions yearly paid out of the king's exchequer. And in the park here was, in the beginning of K. Edward 2d's reign, a royal chapel for thirteen chaplains and four clerks, who had yearly ſalaries out of the manors of Langley-marſh, and Sippenham in Bucks. King Edward 3. anno regni 4. removed thoſe chaplains and clerks out of the park into the caſtle, and ſhortly after added four more chaplains and two clerks to them. But this victorious prince, being afterwards deſirous of raiſing this place of his nativity to much greater ſplendor, refounded this ancient free chapel royal, and in A. D. 1352. eſtabliſh'd it as a collegiate church to the honor of the Virgin Mary, St. George and St. Edward king and confeſſor, conſiſting of a cuſtos, (ſince called a dean) twelve great canons or prebendaries, thirteen vicars or minor canons, four clerks, ſix choriſters, twenty ſix poor alms knights, beſides other officers. Their yearly revenues were rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 1602 l. 2 s. 1 d. ob. q[a]. This free chapel was particularly excepted out of the act for ſuppreſſing colleges, etc. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. and ſtill ſubſiſts in a flouriſhing condition.

ABINGDON, formerly St. Helen's, now Chriſt's Hoſpital.

THE hoſpital of St. Helen here was founded by Geffrey Barbar, and Sir John de S. Helena [c], in the reign [d] of K. Henry 5. There were in Leland's time ſix poor men and ſix poor women maintained in it by the gild or fraternity of the Holy Croſs [e], which was founded for the building and repairing of bridges [f] and high ways, and the maintenance of poor people. But this gild being diſſolved by the act for taking away chantries, etc. Sir John Maſon, one of the maſters of requeſts, and a native of this place, obtained the lands, and therewith founded the preſent hoſpital, called Chriſt's Hoſpital, 19 Maii A. D. 1553. for the maintenance of thirteen poor men and women.

RAVENSTON[g].

K. Henry 3. about the 39th year of his reign, built here and endowed, out of the lands of Peter de Chaceport, rector of Ivingho, archdeacon of Wells and maſter of his wardrobe, a ſmall monaſtery of Black canons, which was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary [h], and by the prior and four canons was ſurrendered, 16 Hen. 8. into the hands of the biſhop of Lincoln, as ordinary of the place. It was the next year, when it was valued at 57 l. 15 s. as in one [i] account, or at 66 l. 13 s. 4 d. as in in another [k], given to cardinal Wolſey, toward the endowment of his colleges; and when, upon his fall, it came into the crown again, it was paſſed thence, 2 Ed. 6. to Sr. Fr. Bryan, and 4 Mar. to Sr. Rob. Throgmorton.

NEWPORT PAINELL.

JOHN DE SOMERY [a], about the ninth year of K. Edward 1. founded an hoſpital here, which was dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt, and St John the Evangeliſt [a], and rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 6 l. 6 s. 8 d. per ann. as both Dugd. and Speed. This was refounded by Q. Anne, the royal conſort of K. James 1. for three poor men and three poor women, who are above fifty years of age, and is therefore ſince called, Q. Anne's Hoſpital. The vicar of Newport, for the time, is appointed maſter.

[a] Mr. Speed ſaith, "John de Peynton of Newport founder, "and dedicated to St. Leonard;" but the Newport hoſpital, dedicated to St. Leonard, was at Newport in Eſſex; and, perhaps, John de Peynton, might be founder of that. This being certainly founded by John de Somery, whoſe family preſented the maſter, as appears from the Lincoln regiſters, particularly ſub anno A. D. 1291. Here was alſo an houſe of lepers in this town, who had K. Edward 1ſt's licence to aſk alms, etc. as Pat. 3 vel 13 Ed. 1. m. 22. But it might be St. Margaret's, or the new hoſpital above mentioned.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

SOHAM olim Seham.

Here[a] S. Felix the apoſtle[b], and firſt biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles, is ſaid, about the year 630. to have founded a monaſtery[c], and to have placed the epiſcopal ſee[d], which was afterward removed to Dunwich. And hither that holy man's body was brought ſome time after his death and buried, tho' his bones were at length tranſlated from hence to Ramſey abby[e], when the great church here[f], built by a noble Saxon called Luttingus, was burnt; and the monks, a famous[g] convent of whom flouriſhed here under abbat Werefrid, were killed by the Daniſh army under the conduct of Inguar and Ubba, A. D. 870[h].

ELY.

The tradition about K. Ethelbert's[i] founding, at the inſtance of St. Auguſtine, a church or monaſtery here, or at a place about a mile from hence called Cradindene, ſeeming not to be well grounded; Etheldreda, one of the daughters of K. Anna, and wife firſt to Tombert prince of this country, and afterward to Egfrid king of Northumberland, may more juſtly be accounted the firſt beginner of a very famous religious ſociety here, about A. D. 673. This firſt church was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and in it the ſervice of God was performed both by monks and nuns, who lived together under the government of an abbeſs, according to the uſage in theſe early times, at Coludeſbergh (where the royal foundreſs and firſt abbeſs made her profeſſion of a monaſtic life) and other Saxon monaſteries; and in this ſtate probably it continued near two hundred years, till this country was over-run, and all the houſes of religion deſtroyed by the heathen Danes about A. D. 870. Some few years after, a ſmall number of the religious men, that had eſcaped the maſſacre, returned hither, and repairing ſome part of the church and buildings, lived here as Secular prieſts under the government of provoſts or archprieſts for about one hundred years. But, in the year 970. Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter introduced an abbat and Regulars, nobly re-edified the monaſtery, and amply endowed the ſame, partly by his own purchaſes, and partly by the munificence of K. Edgar, and other benefactors. A. D. 1108. the ſee of a new biſhoprick, taken out of the dioceſe of Lincoln, was eſtabliſhed here, which occaſioned a diviſion of the lands of this rich abby between the biſhop (who was to be in place of the abbat) and the prior and monks; the ſhare of the biſhop was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 2134 l. 18 s. 6 d. ob.[k] and what remained to the convent was reckoned at 1084 l. 6 s. 9 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 1301 l. 8 s. 2 d. Speed. This monaſtery was dedicated to St. Peter and St. Etheldreda, commonly called St. Audrey, and in it were a prior and between thirty and forty monks of the order of St. Benedict. Upon their ſurrender, K. Henry 8. placed here, A. D. 1541. a dean and eight Secular canons or prebendaries, with vicars, lay clerks, choriſters, a ſchoolmaſter and uſher, and twenty four king's ſcholars, etc. and endowed them with the ſite and greateſt part of the lands belonging to the priory.

THORNEY, olim Ancarig [a].

Saxulph, the firſt abbat of Peterburgh, is ſaid, with the conſent of Wulpher king of Mercia, to have built here a monaſtery, or rather a heremitage, as early as St. Etheldreda's time [b]; and here were a prior and ſeveral anchorites A. D. 870.[c] but this houſe having been deſtroyed by the Danes, Ethelwold biſhop of Wincheſter, A. D. 972. refounded it for Benedictine monks, to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary [d]. The patronage of this abby was granted by K. John, anno regni 15 [e] vel 16 [f]. to Euſtace then biſhop of Ely, and his ſucceſſors. Its poſſeſſions were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 411 l. 12 s. 11 d. per ann. Dugd. 508 l. 12 s. 5 d. Speed; great part of which, with the ſite of the monaſtery, were given, 3 Ed. 6. to John earl of Bedford.

ELTESLEY,

An old nunnery near the vicarage[a] (where St. Pandiania, the daughter of a king of Scotland, is ſaid to have been buried[b]) deſtroyed before or about the time of the Conqueſt, whereupon a new nunnery was erected not far off at Hintchinbrook in Huntingdonſhire.

SWAVESEY.

The church of St. Andrew here, with the tithes thereunto belonging, being given, temp. Will. Conq. by Alan Rufus, or la Zuſche, or Zouch, earl of Britanny and Richmond, to the abby of St. Sergius and Bachus[c], and St. Briocus at Angiers, it became a cell of Benedictine monks[d] to that foreign monaſtery. After that the alien priories, during the wars with France, were often ſeiſed, this was given, or rather ſold, by the French abbat and convent to the priory of St. Anne near Coventry, by licence from K. Richard 2. and after confirmed by authority of parliament, 6 Hen. 4.[e]

CAMBRIDGE.

HERE, near Greencroft, was a Benedictine nunnery, if not ſo early as A. D. 1130[c]. yet about the middle of K. Stephen's reign, which was much enlarged in its revenues, and, with the addition of a new conventual church, dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary and St. Radegund, by Malcolm 4. king of Scotland, about A. D. 1160. But this houſe being greatly dilapidated in its buildings, goods, etc. and forſaken by the nuns, was, A. D. 1497. converted by that excellent prelate John Alcock biſhop of Ely (with the licence of K. Henry 7. and approbation of pope Alexander 6.) into a college for a maſter, . . . fellows and ſtudents, which is commonly called Jeſus college; the revenues of which were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at no more than 87 l. 18 s. 3 d. per ann. But there are now a maſter, ſixteen fellows, thirty ſcholarſhips, and two exhibitions.

AN old hoſpital for a maſter and brethren[d], founded by Nigellus biſhop of Ely[e], or rather by one Hen. Froſt[f] burgeſs of Cambridge, in the time of Nigellus, to the honor of St. John the evangeliſt, which was ſaid to have been at firſt endowed with 140 l. per ann. but, by a very accurate account of the revenues taken juſt before the ſuppreſſion of this houſe, they amounted to no more than 80 l. 1 s. 10 d. ob. A. D. 1281. Hugh de Balſham biſhop of Ely obtained licence from the king to turn this hoſpital into a college of ſtudents, "ſecundum regulam ſcolarium Oxon. qui de Merton cognominantur," pat. 9 Ed. 1. Which project did not take effect; ſo that it continued till K. Henry 7's time, when, by reaſon of the alienations and ill behavior of the then members, it was ſurrendered or diſſolv'd; and the ſite and lands were granted, 2 Hen. 8. to the executors of the lady Margaret counteſs of Richmond, in order to the erecting a college, to be dedicated to St. John the evangeliſt, in the ſame place, according to the will of that good lady and great encourager of learning, which was ſhortly after done: And, by the munificence of the foundreſs and other benefactors, herein are now maintained a maſter, fifty four fellows, above eighty ſcholars, beſides officers and ſervants. Their revenues were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 507 l. 12 s. 7 d.

[a] So Leland. Collect. i. 441. But that Wendy itſelf belonged to this preceptory of Shengay is plain from the Nomina Villarum mſ. 9 Ed. 2. and Mon. Angl. ii. 546. However there ſeem to have been Knights Templars at Wendy, before the ſuppreſſion of that order, diſtinct from the Hoſpitalars of Shengay. For in an old mſ. roll of the Norwich taxation of the dioceſe of Ely, A. D. 1255. after the valuation of Wendy, follows, "Templarii de eadem "x. marc." and in the ſame roll, under Senegeye, are put "Hoſpitalarii;" and the "Fratres hoſp. de Senegye" occur in other places: Mr. Speed ſaith, "there were firſt Templars "at Shengay;" but upon what good authority doth not yet appear. That here were ſome time ſiſters of the order of St. John, ſee Mon. Angl. ii. 550.

[b] Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 546. but in p. 510. of that tome, an earl of Gloceſter is joined with Sibylla in the donation of Shengay. Mr. Camden placeth the beginning of this houſe A. D. 1130. and ſo doth Mr. Speed: But it is not clear who the foundreſs was, or who her father. She is not mention'd by Sr. Will. Dugd. in his Baronage under this name, as the wife of John de Reynes (as Camden calls her;) and then ſhe muſt have been the widow of Rob. Fitz Hamon, if ſhe was Sibyll the daughter of Roger Montgomery earl of Shrewſbury and Arundel; or ſhe might be Sibyll the daughter of Roger of Poictou, third ſon to that Roger Montgomery. See Baronage, i. 329.

[c] So Parker and Fuller, which Dr. Sherman will not allow.

[d] This ſeems to have been a houſe of Seculars, not Regulars (as Speed, Parker, Fuller, etc.) for 'tis upon the Ely regiſters, and other muniments, ever called an Hoſpital, and not a Priory; the head was called Magiſter, not Prior; the members, Fratres, not Canonici.

[e] A. D. 1134. Parker; 1145. Fuller; both out of Godwin. De praeſul. Elienſ. but the Liber Elienſis, Angl. Sacr. and other authentic hiſtories, which are otherwiſe very particular in the acts of this biſhop, are ſilent as to this foundation.

THORNEY.

HERE was an hoſpital for poor perſons, under the government of the abby [temp. Roberti epiſc. Lincoln. inter A. D. 1147 et 1166.] See the charter of Hen. de March, and his grant of ſome tithes to this hoſpital, in Mon. Angl. tom. i. p. 247. a.

DENNY olim Daneia.

ABOUT A. D. 1160. Robert the chamberlain to Conan duke of Britanny and earl of Richmond, became monk at Ely, and gave a ſmall iſland called Elmeney[a], in the pariſh of Beche to that convent, whereupon a cell of their monks was placed there, but they being mightily incommoded by the water, Aubery Picot gave them ſome acres on a higher ſituation in the iſle of Deneye[a], where they ſettled, and had a church dedicated to St. James and St. Leonard, before the death of biſhop Nigell, which happened A. D. 1169. Theſe Benedictines from Ely do not ſeem to have continued here long, for in the next century here were perſons of another order, viz. Templars, for in the taxation of this dioceſe of Ely, made A. D. 1255. the Templarii de Daneye, or the Fratres de Daneye[b], occur often as owners of lands in ſeveral pariſhes within the deanery of Cheſterton. Within leſs than a hundred years after that, we meet with a third ſort of Religious at this place; for K. Edward 3. having given the manor of Denny to Mary de S. Paulo widow to Adomare earl of Pembroke, ſhe firſt deſigned to give it to the abby of Waterbech, but afterward alter'd her mind, and, 15 Ed. 3. founded here a monaſtery for an abbeſs and nuns Minoriſſes, to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary and St. Clare, to which, within a few years, Waterbech was united. So that about the time of the general diſſolution, there were in Denny abby twenty five nuns, who where endowed with lands to the yearly value of 172 l. 8 s. 3 d. ob. Dugd. 218 l. 0 s. 1 d. ob. Speed[c]; the greateſt part of which, with the ſite of the monaſtery, paſſed from the crown, 31 Hen. 8. to Edward Elrington.

[b] The church of Wendy being given to Denny, while in poſſeſſion of the monks of Ely, perhaps the "Templarii de "eadem" (mentioned above in SHENGAY) were the ſame with the "Templarii de Daneye." But farther, the "Templarii manentes apud Denney" are mentioned in an old cartulary of the biſhoprick of Ely, as holding lands in the manor of Stretham. See alſo cart. 37 Hen. 3. refer'd to in Pat. 2 Ed. 4.

An ancient hoſpital here, founded probably by ſome of the biſhops, and partly maintained out of the revenues of the biſhopric, occurs, 16 Hen. 2. in the account of the vacancy upon the death of biſhop Nigell [a]. But it is not evident whether the hoſpital of Ely, there mentioned, was that of St. John Baptiſt, or that of St. Mary Magdalen [b], two hoſpitals, both in Ely, which were united by biſhop Hugh Norwold [c], about A. D. 1240. and managed by ſome of the monks of the priory till the year 1458 [d], when biſhop Will. Gray made one of his Secular chaplains maſter or warden. It was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 25 l. 5 s. 3 d. ob. q. per ann. and, 4 Eliz. ſettled on the maſter and fellows of Clare hall in Cambridge [e].

Sr. Hugh de Malebisse [a], having married (temp. Joannis) Beatrix [b], lady of the manor of Wykes, they, in the beginning of K. Henry 3d's reign, built and endowed here a priory for three Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin, to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and the Holy Croſs. This manor, with the advowſon of the priory, deſcended afterwards to Mary Thornton [b], who married Sr. Humphry Baſſingborn; after whoſe deceaſe, ſhe augmented this monaſtery with lands for the maintenance of four canons more, about 31 Ed. 1. and there were other benefactors to this houſe; which, however, being much run to decay, both in its revenues and buildings, was, A. D. 1449. perpetually united to the cathedral monaſtery of Ely, (wherein the founders were buried) by Walter biſhop of Norwich, ordinary of the place [c], with the leave of K. Henry 6. and the conſent of the patron John Tiptoft earl of Worceſter, A. D. 1449. and ſo it continued till the diſſolution, after which, 36 Hen. 8. it was granted, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of Ely, to Geo. Carleton in truſt, as it ſeems [d], for Sr. Edw. North.

About A. D. 1284. Hugh de Balſham biſhop of Ely removed the ſcholars, which he had ſome years before placed in the hoſpital of St. John, to two hoſtles adjoining to the church yard of St. Peter, in Trumpington ſtreet, without the gates of the town, and ſo began the foundation of St. Peter-houſe or college, ſometime called the Houſe of St. Mary, or Aula B. Mariae de Gratia, which, by the charity of the ſaid right reverend founder, and other benefactors, has been ſince ſo well endowed as to maintain a maſter, nineteen fellows, twenty nine bible clerks, eight poor ſcholars, etc. The revenues of this college, 26 Hen. 8. were rated at 125 l. 7 s. 0 d. q.

John de Cranden prior of Ely [a], in the beginning of K. Edward 3d's reign, bought a houſe near Burden [b] hoſtle, wherein he placed a few Benedictine monks from Ely, for their better improvement in univerſity learning. But within few years this houſe was granted to Will. Bateman biſhop of Norwich, who thereon built part of Trinity hall [c].

Thirty two ſcholars having been maintained in this univerſity by the royal bounty of K. Edward 2. probably ſome in one college or hoſtle, and ſome in others; K. Edward 3. pitched upon a place in the pariſh of All Saints near the hoſpital of St. John, whereon he built and endowed a college for the like number of ſtudents, naming it King's hall, under the government of a maſter or warden. It is ſaid to have been begun in A. D. 1332. but not finiſhed till the year 1376. It was made a part of Trinity college by K. Henry 8. and its revenues, valued at 211 l. 12 s. 7 d. per ann. given thereto.

Upon parting with their habitation to biſhop Bateman, the monks of Ely are ſaid to have fixed themſelves on the other ſide of the Cam with thoſe of Ramſey, Walden, and other Benedictines, in or near the place where the priory of St. Giles formerly ſtood. Hence called Monks college, which being begun to be rebuilt and better endowed by Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham about A. D. 1519. it was from him called Buckingham college [b]; which name was but of ſhort continuance, for, A. D. 1542. Thomas lord Audley, lord chancellor of England, obtained the ſite, and thereon founded St. Mary Magdalen college, wherein are now a maſter, ſixteen fellows, thirty one ſcholars, etc.

[a] So in the Index to the rolls; but probably for Fendrayton.

[b] Parker, and after him Le Neve, and others place this foundation, A. D. 1459. and yet ſay it was by licence of K. Edward 4. who did not begin to reign till 1460. Mr. Fuller placeth it lower, and agrees better with the record.

[c] I cannot give any account either of the foundation, or valuation of this priory; and yet it was in being 20 Hen. 8. for I find it mentioned that year in the following manner: "There is a drayne from Upwell to Welney, and beginneth at Thirlinge-gate, which the prior of Mermaud and the chanon of Thirlinge muſt clenſe. The river from Erith to Benwick, from Kirkewere to Dodney Cote, Mr. Croft ſhall clenſe; and from thence to the willow in Fages-fenne, the prior of Thirling ſhall clenſe; from Mermaud to Thirling lake, the prior of Thirling, the cellerer of Bury, and the prior of Mermaud ſhall clenſe." A manor in Thirling and Upwell, with ſeveral meſſuages, lands, etc. in Thirling and Upwell were granted, 30 Hen. 8. to Thomas Meggs, as part of the poſſeſſions of the priory of Ixworth in Suffolk; unleſs it be a miſtake in the abſtracts I have procured.

CHESHIRE.

CHESTER, olim Legeceaſter [a], biſhoprick and abby.

THOUGH this city is deſervedly famous on account of its antiquity, being unqueſtionably a colony of the Romans and the ſtation of one of their legions [b], yet the building of a cathedral church here to the honor of St. Peter and St. Paul, in the time of K. Lucius [c], muſt be looked upon as a fiction of later writers. Of not much better authority is the tradition concerning Wulphere (who was the firſt Chriſtian king of Mercia) his founding here, about the year 670. a nunnery for his daughter Werburgh [d], and other virgins diſpoſed to lead monaſtic lives. It is more certain that, before the end of the ſeventh century [e], an epiſcopal ſee for part of the Mercian dominions was placed in this city. This was ſome time under different, but for the moſt part under the ſame biſhops with Litchfield, and to that at length was united; but after the Conqueſt, biſhop Peter and his ſucceſſor Rob. de Limeſy [f], removing wholly from Litchfield, fixed their reſidence for almoſt thirty years here at Cheſter in St. John's church, where biſhop Peter was buried, till A. D. 1102. when biſhop Robert, taking greater liking to the rich monaſtery of Coventry, made that one of his cathedrals, and left Cheſter [g].

IN this city there was pretty early in the Saxon times a religious houſe, probably a nunnery [h], and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul [i], whither, as to a place of ſafety, the remains of St. Werburg were brought from Heanburgh A. D. 875 [k]. But this monaſtery was ruined by the wars or injury of time, and in the reign of K. Ethelſtan re-edified for Secular canons [l], by the noble Elfleda counteſs of Mercia [m], and afterwards it was more amply endowed by the munificence of K. Edmund [n], K. Edgar [o], earl Leofric [p], and other benefactors, in honor of the above mentioned royal holy virgin St. Werburg. In the year 1093. at the inſtigation of the famous Anſelm after archbiſhop of Canterbury, Hugh Lupus earl of Cheſter expelled from hence the Seculars, and ſettled here an abbat and convent of Benedictine monks from Bec in Normandy, in whoſe poſſeſſion St. Werburgh's church continued till the general diſſolution of monaſteries in England by K. Henry 8. who, anno regni 33. reſtored the ſame (which was to be thenceforth ſtyled the Church of Chriſt and the bleſſed Virgin) to a dean and ſix prebendaries, and made this city once more the ſeat of a biſhop. The yearly revenues of the abby were rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 1003 l. 5 s. 11 d. Dugd. 1073 l. 17 s. 7 d. ob. q. Speed [q].

CHESTER.

CHESTER.

The ancient collegiate church of St. John Baptiſt, in the eaſt part of this city, is ſaid by Giraldus Cambrenſis to have been founded by K. Ethelred A. D. 689 [a]. but more probably Ethelred earl of Mercia, A. D. 906. founded, or however new built it, with the reſt of the city [b]. For, not long after, here was a noted church or monaſtery dedicated to this ſaint [c], which was repaired in the next century by earl Leofric [d], and appears to have been endowed with houſes and lands at the time of the Conqueror's ſurvey [e]. When Peter biſhop of Litchfield removed the epiſcopal ſee hither, he is reported to have made this church his cathedral [f]. Here was, till the ſuppreſſion, a dean and ſeven prebendaries or canons (who were in the collation of the biſhop of Litchfield [g]) beſides ſeven vicars, two clerks, four choriſters [h], ſextons and other ſervants. Their yearly income, 26 Hen. 8. was 88 l. 16 s. 8 d. but after repriſals there remained clear only 27 l. 17 s. 4 d. [i] The king was accounted founder [k]. Some part of the buildings, and ſite of this college, was granted to John Forteſcue, 4 Eliz.

BRUNNESBURGH or Brimeſburgh [l].

Here was a monaſtery founded by the famous Elfleda counteſs of Mercia, about the year of Chriſt 912. [Jo. Bromton. Chron. inter Decem ſcript. col. 834. Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 215. 219.] Whatever this was, it probably ſoon decayed. The church of Bromburgh or Bronborrow in Wyrehall was impropriated to the abby of Cheſter, and ſince made part of the endowment of that dean and chapter.

RUNCORN, olim Runcovan.

The often mentioned noble Mercian lady Elfleda is alſo ſaid to have founded a religious houſe at this place [m]; but it is more certain that William Fitz Nigell, A. D. 1133. built here a priory for Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin, who, temp. Steph. [n] were removed by his ſon William conſtable of Cheſter to

NORTON [o],

Which was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and valued, about the time of the diſſolution, at 180 l. 7 s. 6 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 258 l. 11 s. 8 d. Speed [p]. The ſite and great part of the poſſeſſions of this monaſtery were granted, 37 Hen. 8. to Richard Brook eſquire.

[c] There ſeem to have been nuns ſettled at Cheſter before the time of earl Randal the ſecond, even by that deed which in the Monaſticon is called "Carta fundationis," whereby he only gave them ground to build a new church on. This conjecture will be better ſupported if the grant of tythes made by earl Hugh (refer'd to in the charter of K. Hen. 3. Prynne, p. 104.) was made by Hugh Lupus.

PULTON.

Here was a Ciſtertian abby, built and endowed by Robert, who was pincerna or butler to Randal ſecond earl of Cheſter, A. D. 1153[a]. but, by reaſon of the frequent incurſions of the Welſh, the monks were tranſlated, A. D. 1214. to Dieulacres in Staffordſhire, by Randal third earl of Cheſter. Pulton continued parcel of the poſſeſſions of that monaſtery till the diſſolution, and as ſuch was granted, 36 Hen. 8. to Will. Cotton eſquire.

STANLAW or Locus Benedictus de Stanlawe.

John conſtable[c] of Cheſter and baron of Halton founded here, A. D. 1172[d], an abby for forty Ciſtertian monks to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary; but upon a repreſentation to pope Nicholas 4. that, by reaſon of its low ſituation, this monaſtery was often much incommoded by the overflowings of the ſea, or water of Merſey, he gave leave to tranſlate theſe Religious to Whalley in Lancaſhire, where they had a better habitation provided for them by the pious munificence of Henry Lacy earl of Lincoln, about the year 1296[e]. There were only four monks left here, where a ſmall cell ſeems to have continued till the diſſolution[f]. Stanley-grange in Cheſhire, parcel of the poſſeſſions of the late diſſolved monaſtery of Whalley, was granted, 7 Ed. 6. to Sr. Robert Cotton knt.

[e] So Sr. Peter Leyceſter, p. 241. more right than Mr. Lee, who (Vale Royal, p. iii. p. 54.) aſcribes the foundation to Hamon the fifth, whoſe charters are in the Monaſt. for there is undoubted evidence that this priory was in being at the beginning of K. John's reign, and it is mentioned in the catalogue of religious houſes by Gervaſe of Canterbury, thought to have been wrote temp. Ric. 1.

[f] So Leland. Itin. vol. v. p. 46. but the grant of free election for a prior, the diſtinct valuation of its poſſeſſions, both in Tax. Lincoln. and 26 Hen. 8. make me doubt much whether this was a cell to Cheſter.

Here Patric de Modberley founded a priory of Black canons to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary and St. Wilfrid, about A. D. 1206[a]. In the pariſh of the Holy Trinity here was a houſe of Grey or Franciſcan friers, which perhaps might be as ancient as K. Henry 3d's time. Mr. Speed puts down K. John as their founder, but he was dead ſome years before this order came into England. The ſite of this houſe was granted to John Cokke.

D. 1330. The conventual church here was dedicated to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Virgin Mary, St. Nicholas, and St. Nichaſius; and it was endowed, 26 Hen. 8. with lands and revenues to the clear yearly value of [d] 518 l. 19 s. 8 d. or, according to Mr. Speed, of 540 l. 6 s. 2 d. The ſite of this abby was granted, 35 Hen. 8. to Tho. CHESTER.

IN St. Martin's pariſh here was the houſe of Carmelite or White friers, built by Thomas Stadham gent. A. D. 1279. Speed; the ſite of which, after the ſuppreſſion, was granted by K. Henry 8. to John Cokke.

BY the Lincoln taxation of the temporalities of the clergy, made A. D. 1291. it ſhould ſeem as if there had been then a collegiate church of the name of the Holy Croſs, becauſe under "Archidiaconatus Ceſtre," and immediately before "Abbas Ceſtriae" is this memorandum, "Portionarii eccleſiae prebendalis S. Crucis Ceſtriae non habent temporalia, ſed omnia quae habent taxantur cum ſpiritualibus, prout firmiter aſſerebant [a]." But I have yet met with no other mention of this ſociety, nor of any church in this city, either collegiate or parochial, ſo dedicated.

WITHOUT the north gate was an ancient hoſpital, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt. It was formerly a ſanƈtuary [b], and endowed with great privileges [c]. The maſterſhip was granted, 9 Ed. 2. to the prior of Birkhead and his ſucceſſors [d]. This houſe conſiſted, 26 Hen. 8. of a chaplain and ſix poor brethren [e], and had lands and profits to the yearly value of 28 l. 10 s. 4 d. but after repriſals worth only 13 l. 7 s. 10 d. clear, which is the valuation in Dugdale, Speed, and Eƈton.

Vide Cowell's Interpreter [edit. 1701. fol.] in verbo Breach Carnium; Thomas Crew magiſter hoſpitalis S. [a] Thus in the mſſ. copies of this taxation in the Savile library, and alſo in the archives of the dean and chapter of Lincoln: But this paragrah is not in the Litchfield book, in which dioceſe this archdeaconry then was; nor is there in the two firſt mentioned books, among the ſpiritualities, any account of the taxation of ſuch a church, tho' there is of the prebendal church of St. John: Quaere, Whether not the ſame?

[c] This probably was the houſe, which was endowed with ſeveral eſtates, taxed in the Lincoln valuation, made A. D. 1291. under the title of "Magiſter hoſpitalis Ceſtriae." See Mon. Angl. tom. i. 938. a.

[d] There is reaſon to think that this grant was afterward reſumed, for after this upon the patent rolls appear many diſpoſitions of the maſterſhip by the crown to Secular clergymen.

St. Petroc, a religious man born in Wales, but coming from Ireland, is ſaid to have built a monaſtery on the north coaſt of Cornwall, about A. D. 520. and to have been there buried [b]; but his body being afterward removed [c] to

BODMIN, olim Boſmanna [d],

There was a church built to his memory, and the epiſcopal ſee for Cornwall was therein placed by K. Edward the elder and archbiſhop Plegmund, A. D. 905 [e]. Here K. Æthelſtan is reported to have met with old Saxon, or rather Britiſh, monks following the rule of St. Benedict, to whom he granted ſo great privileges and endowments, that he is accounted founder of the monaſtery here, about A. D. 926. That ſettlement was deſtroyed by the Daniſh pirates, A. D. 981. yet the Religious continued here under ſeveral ſhapes [f], and much alienations of their lands, both before and after the Conqueſt, till about the year 1120. when one Algar, with the king's licence and the conſent of Will. Warlewaſt biſhop of Exeter, re-eſtabliſhed this religious houſe, and placed therein Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin, who continued till the general ſuppreſſion, when it was ſtyled the priory of St. Mary and St. Petroc, and was valued at 270 l. 0 s. 11 d. per ann. Dugd. 289 l. 11 s. 11 d. Speed. St. GERMANS.

Here was a collegiate church of ancient foundation in honor of St. German, one of the famous French biſhops, who came over into Britain to oppoſe the Pelagian hereſy. K. Ethelſtan is ſaid to have made one Conan biſhop here, A. D. 936. tho' it ſeems more probable that the epiſcopal ſee for Cornwall was not fixed here till after the burning of the biſhop's houſe and cathedral church at Bodmin; after which K. Canute more amply endowed this church of St. German; and, about A. D. 1050. Leofric, who was biſhop here and of Crediton, having united both biſhopricks in the church of St. Peter at Exeter, changed the Seculars [a] here into Regular canons [b]. The yearly revenues of this priory were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 243 l. 8 s. Dugd. Speed. 227 l. 4 s. 8 d. Clare, mſ. Valor. The ſite was granted, 33 Hen. 8. to Kath. ST. BURIEN.

KING Ethelſtan is ſaid to have built and endowed a collegiate church almoſt at the Land's End [c], and to have granted the benefit of a ſanctuary and other privileges to the ſame, in honor of St. Buriena or Beriana a holy woman from Ireland, who had an oratory and was buried here. TRUWARDRAITH[a], Tuwardraz[b], or Tywardreit in the deanry of Powder.

An alien priory of Benedictine monks[c] belonging to the abby of St. Sergius and Bachus in Angiers[d], founded before A. D. 1169. by Champernulphus or Chambernon of Bere[e], lord of the manor of Tywardreith, or by the anceſtors of Robert de Cardinan[f], perhaps Robert Fitz William. It was ſeiſed by the crown during the wars with France, and its farm then fixed at fifty marks per ann.[g] but being afterward made deniſon it continued till the general ſuppreſſion, about which time herein were ſeven monks[h], whoſe revenues were rated at 123 l. 9 s. 3 d. per ann. Dugd. 151 l. 16 s. 1 d. Speed. It was dedicated to St. Andrew, and granted 34 Hen. 8. to Edward earl of Hertford.

St. SYRIAC[i], St. Cyriac[k], St. Carricius[l], St. Karrocus[m], St. Cyret, and Julette[n].

Here was a ſmall religious houſe of two Benedictine[o] or Cluniac[p] monks, as early as K. Richard 1ſt's time[q], cell to Montacute[r] in Somerſetſhire; and as parcel of the poſſeſſions of that priory it was granted, 37 Hen. 8. to Laurence Courtney.

Vide Mon. Angl. tom. i. p. 670, 671. tom. ii. p. 910. Pat. 15 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 5. de conceſſione hujus cellae Willelmo comiti Sariſb. per priorem et conv. de Montecuto.

St. ANTONY or Antonine.

In this county were two priories of this name, which are often confounded by ſome of our writers.

One was a cell of Black monks of Angiers, belonging to Trewardreth priory[s], and being mentioned in Gervaſe of Canterbury's catalogue muſt be as early as K. Richard 1ſt's time. The rectory here, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of Tywardreith, was granted, 6 Eliz. to William and John Killigrew.

The other, St. Anthony's near St. Mawes, was a ſmall priory of two Auſtin canons ſubordinate to Plimpton[t], and as parcel of the ſame was granted, 38 Hen. 8. to Thomas Goodwin.

TALCARN and St. MARY DE VALLE.

Gervase of Canterbury, among other Corniſh monaſteries in his time, reckons theſe two as cells of Black monks[u] to Angiers in France; but I know not where they were, unleſs Talcarn, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, be the ſame with Tywardreith, and the other be the ſame with St. Michael de Valle, a priory in Guernſey.

St. MATTHEWS, forſan St. Mawes. Qu.

In the cart. roll of the fifteenth year of K. John, m. 2. n. 42. there is a grant of a hundred ſhillings per ann. out of the church of St. Berian in Cornwall to the monks of St. Matthew. I have not yet found any monaſtery elſewhere in England dedicated to that Apoſtle.

TREGONY in the deanry of Powder.

THE advowſon of the priory of Tregony, as belonging to the Abby de Valle in Normandy, is mentioned fin. div. com. 52 Hen. 3. n. 18. Perhaps, inſtead of the priory, it ſhould have been only the rectory or church of St. James in Tregoney, which, by means of ſome exchange, was made over by the abbat and convent De Valle in dioec. Bajoc. to the prior and convent of Merton, to whom it was appropriated, and a vicarage ordained by Peter Quirit biſhop of Exeter.

CUMBERLAND.

ST. BEE'S[d].

BEGA, an holy woman from Ireland, is ſaid to have founded, about the year of our Lord 650. a ſmall monaſtery in Copeland, where afterward a church was built in memory of her. This religious houſe being deſtroy'd by the Danes, was reſtored by William ſon to Ranulph de Meſchin earl of Cumberland, temp. Hen. 1. and made a cell of a prior and ſix Benedictine monks to the abby of St. Mary at York. It was endowed (at the diſſolution) with 143 l. 17 s.[e] 2 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 149 l. 19 s. 6 d. Speed, and granted, 7 Ed. 6. to Sr. Tho. DACOR.

BEDE, in his eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, book iv. ch. 32. mentions a monaſtery, which being built near the river Dacore took its name from it, over which the religious man Suidbert preſided; and Camden in Cumberland, and Leland. Coll. ii. p. 152. ſpeak of it from him: But it doth not appear from any records to have been ſtanding ſince the Conqueſt, as is noted at the bottom of Gibſon's Camden, col. 831. edit. 1695.

CARLIOL.

SEVERAL writers of St. Cuthbert's life tell us of that holy man's founding here, A. D. 686. a convent of monks, a ſchool, and an abby of nuns; but from Bede's life of St. Cuthbert, cap. 27. it ſeems as if the monaſtery here, to which Q. Ermenburga retired, was in being before St. Cuthbert's coming to Carliol. But all theſe eccleſiaſtical buildings, with the city and adjacent country, being laid waſte in the Daniſh wars, the city was rebuilt and fortified by K. William Rufus, and Walter a Norman prieſt (being made by that king governor of the city) began[f] a monaſtery to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, which was finiſhed and endowed by K. Henry 1. who placed Regular canons therein[g]; and when he had eſtabliſhed the biſhop's ſee here, made this church a cathedral: But it is obſervable, that this was the only epiſcopal chapter in England of the order of St. Auſtin [a]. The revenues of the biſhopric were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 577 l. in the whole; and 531 l. 4 s. 11 d. clear. And the revenues of the priory were then valued at 418 l. 3 s. 4 d. ob. q. as Dugd. and 482 l. 8 s. 1 d. as Speed. The priory was diſſolved Jan. 9. A. D. 1540. by K. Henry 8. who ſhortly after founded here a dean, four canons or prebendaries, eight minor canons, a ſubdeacon, four lay clerks or ſinging men, a maſter of grammar, ſix choriſters, a maſter of the choriſters, ſix almſmen, one verger, two ſextons, etc. and granted them the ſite of the priory and the greateſt part of the revenues of it. In this new foundation the church is called, "The Church of the Holy and "Undivided Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt."

Coll. iii. p. 39. makes them different; and both Leland and Camden think Heortu to have been Hartlepoole.

[c] There ſeems to be great confuſion in the memorandums and charters printed in the Monaſticon out of the regiſter of this priory, concerning the time of its foundation: 1. There is a charter of K. William the Conqueror confirming this cell to St. Mary's and its abbat Richard; whereas St. Mary's was not founded under Will. Conq. nor was Richard abbat till 12 Hen. 1. and among the witneſſes Lucia his wife and Henry his brother being named ſhew plainly, that this could not be a grant of the Conqueror's. 2. This priory is ſaid to have been founded temp. Will. Ruſi, and we are referred to the charter of Ranulf for proof; which charter, with the ſame witneſſes, and inſcribed "Carta prima de Wetheral," being printed in the other column, mentions expreſly the giving of this manor of Wederhall to St. Mary's, "pro anima domini mei regis Henrici."

[k] The foundation charter in Mon. Angl. ii. p. 231. is very uncertainly worded or badly tranſcribed, being printed thus, "Rob. comes de Ferrariis Waltero Coventrienſi epiſcopo, "etc. Ego fundavi domum unam religionis in Derby, in "fiſco regio, concenſu, et confirmatione regis Stephani, et "concenſu regis Henrici." I gueſs it ſhould have been "conſenſu regis Henrici, et confirmatione regis Stephani," for Mon. Angl. iii. p. 59. there is a concord between the abbat of Derley and others, dated A. D. 1121. and, if that be a right date, this houſe muſt have been founded in the reign of K. Henry 1.

[l] There were either ſome Religious left here, or here was an hoſpital, or ſome ſuch houſe, as late as 20 Ed. 1. for in the Lincoln taxation then made, there is, "Magiſter do- "mus S. Helenae Derbeyae," diſtinct from the abbat of Derley.

[m] Mr. Speed ſaith, he was a blackſmith of Derby, and his ſurname was Dean, but in his foundation charter he is expreſly called Prieſt, and ſeems to have been rural dean of Derby (I fear there was no dean of the college of All Saints ſo early) and in Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 231. he is ſaid to be in holy orders, before the taking of which he had a ſon called Henry; but he might have been a tradeſman in his younger days.

EXETER.

This city is ſaid by the Saxons to have been called Monketon[b] from the great number of monks in it; yet the account of the old religious houſes here is but imperfect, by reaſon of the ſilence of our hiſtorians. There is no queſtion but in a city ſo famous as this was in the Roman, Britiſh, and Saxon times, here were, early after their converſion to Chriſtianity, congregations and ſocieties of holy men and women; yet it is not certain whether this was the famous monaſtery of Adeſtanceſter[c], wherein St. Boniface the apoſtle of the Germans, who was born at Crediton in this county, had his education under abbat Wolfhard, about A. D. 690. The induſtrious Mr. Jo. Hooker alias Vowell, the firſt reſtorer of the antiquities of this city (whereof he was chamberlain) ſaith[d], "That in ancient times, within the precincts of the cloſe, were three "religious houſes; the firſt was a nunnery, which is now the dean's houſe", [or as Mr. Riſdon will have it[e], the Kalendar Hay] "the other was a houſe of monks, reported to have been built "by K. Ethelred, A. D. 868[f]. the third was a monaſtery founded by K. Æthelſtan, A. D. "932." For this laſt there is pretty good authority, and that it was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin and St. Peter, and endowed by the munificence of that king with twenty ſix villages, and filled with Benedictine monks, who not long after forſook the ſame for fear of the Danes: But king Edgar, that great reſtorer of monaſteries, A. D. 968. replaced the Religious here, who were again forced to fly upon the devaſtation of this city and country by the Danes under Swein, A. D. 1003. After this, K. Canute encouraged the monks once more to ſettle here, confirming their lands and privileges, A. D. 1019. But upon the union of the epiſcopal ſees of St. Germans and Crediton, and their tranſlation hither, A. D. 1050. the eight monks remaining here were ſent to Weſtminſter abby, and ſome Secular canons placed in their ſtead by biſhop Leofric. But the chapter of this cathedral was not fixed to a dean and twenty four prebendaries till biſhop Brewer's time, A. D. 1225. The revenues of this biſhopric were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 1566 l. 14 s. 6 d. per ann. But ſo much was ſhortly after taken from it, that they have long been rated at 500 l. only. Beſides the ſeparate corps, the common revenues of the dean and chapter are rated at 1132 l. 18 s. 11 d. ob.[g] per ann. There are now belonging to this ancient cathedral a biſhop, dean, and twenty four prebendaries, whereof nine are reſidentiaries, viz. the dean, praecentor, chancellor, treaſurer, and five others; four archdeacons, four prieſts vicars, eight lay vicars, whereof one is organiſt, ſix ſecondaries, ten choriſters, beſides vergers, ſextons, and other officers.

TAWTON or Biſhop's Tawton.

Eadulphus or Werſtan the firſt biſhop of Devonſhire, about A. D. 905. and Putta the ſecond biſhop, for ſome time had their ſee here, before it was removed to Crediton, as Camden in Devonſhire, Godwyn De praeſulibus, p. 450. and others, aſſert.

CREDITON or Kirton, olim Crediantun, in the deanry of Penne [b].

Here is ſaid to have been a collegiate church in the Saxon times [c], which was made the cathedral of the biſhops of Devonſhire, either immediately upon the diviſion of the dioceſe of Shirburn made by king Edward and archbiſhop Plegmund about A. D. 905 [d]. or at leaſt ſhortly after; and tho' the epiſcopal ſee was removed to Exeter A. D. 1050. yet in the church here (dedicated to the Holy Croſs [e]) remained a chapter under the peculiar juriſdiction and patronage of the biſhops of Exeter. In the Lincoln taxation, 20 Ed. 1. herein are reckon'd but ten prebends; but Leland ſaith [f], that in his time there were here "a dean [g] and twelve prebends, beſides other miniſters," viz. vicars, etc. The valuation, 26 Hen. 8. of the deanry was 29 l. 5 s. 4 d. per ann. clare [h]. Of the twelve prebends, viz. of Henſtyll 12 l. 18 s. 5 d. Credy 8 l. 16 s. 10 d. Stawford 13 l. 6 s. 8 d. Rydge 12 l. Pruſcombe 11 l. 10 s. Wodeland 11 l. Wolgrave 26 l. 6 s. 9 d. ob. Weſt Saunford 8 l. Aller 12 l. Careſwell 15 l. 1 s. 4 d. Croſſe 10 l. and Pola 22 l. and of the common eſtate 140 l. 14 s. 5 d. So that the whole amounted to 332 l. 17 s. 5 d. ob. per ann. The ſite of this college was granted, 37 Hen. 8. to Elizabeth counteſs of Bath and Sr. Thomas Darcy; but the church, and ſeveral lands belonging to the ſame, were beſtowed by K. Edward 6. anno regni 1. on the maſter and governors of the free ſchool, which about that time was here erected.

[c] Before the erection of the biſhopric here, as it ſeems from the hiſtory of Wells. Angl. Sacr. vol. i. p. 555.

[d] This is as early as any hiſtories place this diviſion, and Mr. Wharton, with great probability, puts it lower, viz. A. D. 909. So that the charter of K. Ethelſtan Adulpho epiſc. Crediton. dated A. D. 900. in Riſdon, vol. ii. p. 142. muſt be a miſtake; beſides that king did not begin his reign till ſome years after.

AXMINSTER in the deanry of Honiton.

K. Æthelstan founded here a minſter for ſeven prieſts to pray for the ſouls of thoſe who were ſlain in a battel which he fought againſt the Danes at Bremal-down near this place. This minſter was in after ages altered from ſeven to two prieſts, for whom a portion of land was allotted, known by the name of Prieſt Aller, which with the parſonage belongeth to two prebends in the church of York[f]. It was, during the vacancy of the archiepiſcopal ſee, *temp. [c] So Mon. Angl. i. 54. a. Said to be given to it before A. D. 1248. So Leland and Speed. But yet there is no mention of this priory in K. Ethelſtan's, or any other's grants to Malmſbury. By the charters it ſeems to bear relation to Barnſtaple; for Joel fil. Aluredi expreſly gives them "Piltonam cum boſco et mariſco." Mon. Angl. i. 684. and the manor of Pilton, with the wood there called Yearnwood, was granted 29 Hen. 8. to William lord Howard, as part of the poſſeſſions of Barnſtaple; but it is taxed diſtinct from both in all the Valuations; and tho' Barnſtaple had certainly poſſeſſions in this pariſh, 'tis very uncertain whether it had any power over the priory.

PLYMPTON in the deanry of Plimpton.

A FREE chapel or college, of the foundation of one of the Saxon kings[a], wherein were a dean or provoſt, and four prebendaries with other miniſters[b], which being diſſolved by Will. Warlewaſt biſhop of Exeter, he ſettled here, A. D. 1121[c]. a priory of canons Regular of the order of St. Auſtin, and dedicated the ſame to the apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul. Its yearly revenues, by the benefactions of earl Baldwin de Redveriis[d], and others, exceeded Taveſtoke or any other monaſtery in the dioceſe of Exeter, being valued at 912 l. 12 s. 8 d. ob.q.[e] The ſite was granted, 2 Eliz. to Arthur Champernoon.

OTTERY in the deanry of Aileſbear.

IN the old catalogue of religious houſes, ſuppoſed to be made by Gervaſe of Canterbury or Hen. Sulgrave, temp. Ric. 1[f]. we find mention of a priory here of Black monks dedicated to St. Mary; and the editors of the Monaſticon, vol. i. p. 1036. have made it an alien priory, cell to St. Margaret[g], or, as p. 549. to the abby of St. Mary's in Roan; whereas there was no monaſtery of either of thoſe denominations at Roan, but the church of St. Mary there, being the cathedral of the archbiſhop, conſiſted of Secular canons; to which the manor and church of Ottery were given either by K. Edward the Confeſſor, about the year of our Lord 1060. or by Otho earl of . . . . . before the Conqueſt[h]. They were farmed at ſixty ſix marks, 7 Joannis, and taxed, 20 Ed. 1. as worth 45 l. per ann. In 8 Ed. 3. the dean and chapter obtained the king's leave, and in the next year actually ſold this manor, etc. to John Grandiſon biſhop of Exeter, who, A. D. 1337. founded a college in the pariſh church here for a warden[i], eight prebendaries, ten vicars, a maſter of muſic, a maſter of grammar, two pariſh prieſts, eight ſecondaries, eight choriſters and two clerks, to the honor of Chriſt Jeſus, the bleſſed Virgin Mary,

[a] Not to Mountborow abby, as Leland. Itin. iii. p. 47.

[b] So pat. 1 Ed. 4. but perhaps he only confirmed the grant of K. Henry 6. who is ſaid by Riſdon, vol. i. p. 34. to have given it to Syon.

[c] When this priory was ſeiſed by K. Edward 3. it was farm'd at 120 l. per ann. Coll. mſ. V. cl. M. Hutton e reg. epiſc. Wellenſ.

[d] This is certain, becauſe there is extant a charter of K. William ratifying the foundation. The charter of Joel directed to William biſhop of Exeter (who was not ſo till A. D. 1107.) printed in the Monaſticon, is not that of the foundation, but a ſecond grant.

[e] Leland. Collect. i. 80. Speed, Riſdon, Izaack: But the charters in the Monaſticon go no higher than Will. Rufus, unleſs the editors have miſtaken, and the firſt charter be really William the Conqueror's, who ſeems, by the hiſtory of the foundation [Mon. Angl. i. p. 315.] to have been the donor of St. Olave's church.

[f] Speed makes an hoſpital of St. Nicholas, as well as a priory, and has diſtinguiſh'd them by two valuations, which are both the valuations of the priory; one, the total, and the other, the clear. In Dugdale's valuation, and the book of Penſions, there is mention of the hoſpital of St. Nicholas; but the charters, Taxatio Lincoln. Hen. Sulgrave, and the old writings, refer conſtantly to the prior and monks of St. Nicholas. Riſdon, vol. i. p. 18. ſaith, here were two priories of St. Nicholas; but by his own account they ſeem to be the ſame houſe which he makes cell to the abby of Battel.

WARHAM [f].

Here is ſaid to have been a nunnery [g] in the Saxon times before the year 876 [h], when this town was aſſaulted and taken by the Danes. After the Conqueſt one or more of the churches in this town, with ſome lands in the neighbourhood, being given by Robert earl of Leiceſter, temp. Hen. 1. to the abbat and convent of Lira in Normandy, they ſent over and ſettled here a cell of their own Benedictine monks, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary [i]. When the alien priories, during the wars with France, were ſeized into the king's hands, the priory of Montgrace in Yorkſhire had the revenues of this for ſome years: But when theſe foreign houſes were diſſolved, K. Henry 5. gave this, anno regni 3. to the Carthuſians of Shene, and, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of this laſt mentioned monaſtery, the priory of Warham was granted, 1 Mariae, to Tho. Reve and Geo. Cotton.

WHERE the pariſh church is now was anciently an heremitage, after that a ſmall monaſtery of three Religious [c], founded pretty early in the Saxon times by a rich man, named Egelward [d], to the honor of St. Peter. But Ailmer earl of Cornwall began [e], temp. Edgari, and finiſhed, A. D. 987. a noble abby here for Benedictine monks, which was dedicated to St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. Benedict; and, in later ages, to St. Edwold [f], or Athelwold. It is ſaid to have been deſtroy'd by K. Canute [g], but, by the piety and charity of thoſe old times, recovered itſelf ſo well, that, at the general diſſolution, it was endowed with 515 l. 17 s. 10 d. q. per ann. Dugd. 623 l. 13 s. 2 d. ob. q. Speed [h]. [a] Tho' all hiſtorians agree as to the royal founder of this abby, yet the differences or miſtakes in writing or printing the time of the foundation may teach the lovers of antiquities to be cautious in truſting at firſt ſight to the dates, either of Saxon charters or hiſtories, without farther examination, and comparing the ſame, and the names of the parties and witneſſes, with the moſt authentic chronicles. For inſtance, K. Ethelſtan is well known to have begun his reign in A. D. 924. and to have died A. D. 940. yet the pretended charter of the foundation of this abby, in the Monaſticon, is ſaid to have been executed A. D. 843. and the hiſtory, there alſo printed out of the leiger book of this abby, makes that king to begin his reign A. D. 824. and the Rocheſter Annals, (Leland. Collect. iii. 71.) put this foundation in the year 839. others (Leland. Collect. i. 67.) place it A. D. 896. I have made it in the year 933. being the tenth year of K. Ethelſtan, as expreſly in Mon. Angl. i. 195.

It muſt be confeſſed, that Reyner, tract. ii. p. 138. and Camden in his Britannia, at Cerne, ſeem to believe this ſtory; and that Camden quotes Will. Malmſbury for it. But quaere.

One Aylwardus Snew [d], about the year of our Lord 980. built here an abby of Black monks, in honor of St. Bartholomew, to which at firſt the priory of Teukeſbury in Glocesterſhire was ſubject: But, A. D. 1102. Robert Fitz Haimon having much augmented Teukeſbury both in building and revenues, abbat Girald and his convent thought fit to remove thither, leaving here at Cranburn only a prior and two monks; ſo it continued till the diſſolution a ſmall cell to Tewkeſbury, now made a famous abby, and, as part of its poſſeſſions, was granted, 2 Eliz. to Thomas Francis, and afterward, 5 Jac. 1. to Robert earl of Saliſbury.

LODRES in the deanry of Bridport.

AN alien priory, ſubordinate to the abby of Mountſburgh in Normandy, to which this manor was given by Benedict or Richard de Redveriis, temp. Hen. 1. on which account the abbat of that foreign monaſtery was prebendary in the cathedral church of Saliſbury, and had a houſe in the cloſe there. K. Richard 2. beſtowed this cell, being then worth 80 l. per ann. on the priory of St. Anne near Coventry, during the war between England and France; but 1 Hen. 4. it was reſtored to its old owners. After the diſſolution of theſe houſes, temp. Hen. 5. Lodres was made part of the endowment of Sion abby in Middleſex.

WERMOUTH.

K. Egfrid gave this town to the famous abbat Benedict Biſcopius, who, A. D. 674. founded a monaſtery here, and dedicated it to St. Peter. It ſuffered in the Daniſh wars, and was burned down in the inroad made by Malcolm king of Scotland, A. D. 1070. but was afterward begun to be re-edified by Walcher biſhop of Durham [a], whoſe ſucceſſor Will. de Carilepho, about A. D. 1083. removed moſt of the monks to Durham, to which Wermouth became a cell for three or four Benedictine monks. It was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 25 l. 8 s. 4 d. per ann. Dugd. 26 l. Speed [b]; and was granted, 37 Hen. 8. to Tho. Whitehead.

JARROW, olim Gyrwi.

This was another ancient monaſtery, which owed its original to the bounty of K. Egfrid, and the care of abbat Benedict, about A. D. 684. It was dedicated to the other chief apoſtle St. Paul, was of the ſame order, governed by the ſame abbat, and had the ſame fate with Wermouth, becoming at laſt a cell to Durham; valued at 38 l. 14 s. 4 d. per ann. Dugd. 40 l. 7 s. 8 d. Speed, and was granted, 36 Hen. 8. to William lord Eure [c]. The learned and venerable Bede had his education in this houſe.

CHESTER ON THE STREET, olim Cunaceſtre.

Bishop Eardulfus being forced to fly with the body of St. Cuthbert from Lindisfarn, fixed his epiſcopal ſee here A. D. 883. which, being by the bounty of good people endowed with great revenues and privileges, had probably a chapter of monks, or rather of Secular canons attending it here alſo, tranſlated with the biſhopric to Durham A. D. 995. But, in memory of St. Cuthbert's body having been ſo long in this church, Ant. Beck biſhop of Durham, A. D. 1286. made it collegiate, conſiſting of a dean, ſeven prebendaries, five chaplains, three deacons, and other miniſters. The prebends of the ſeven portioniſts, with the vicarage of this church, were taxed in the Lincoln valuation, 20 Ed. 1. at 146 l. 13 s. 4 d. but 26 Hen. 8. the deanry and ſeven prebends were valued at no more than 77 l. 12 s. 8 d. in the whole, viz. the deanry, 41 l. prebend of Lamley, 5 l. 16 s. 8 d. Welton, 5 l. 16 s. 8 d. Cheſter, 6 l. Lamyſley, 10 l. Tanfield, 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. Byrtly, 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. and Urpeth, 2 l. 6 s.

DURHAM.

Upon the removal of the biſhop's ſee hither by biſhop Aldwin about the year 995. there ſeem to have been in this cathedral a provoſt, and Secular canons, who being, by biſhop William de Carilepho, with conſent of the pope and king, expelled, a prior and convent of Benedictine monks were placed herein, who continued till the general diſſolution in the time of K. Henry 8. when the biſhopric was valued at 3138 l. 9 s. 8 d. per ann. in the whole [d], and 2821 l. 1 s. 5 d. clear, and the revenues of the church at 1366 l. 10 s. 9 d. per ann. Dugd. 1615 l. 14 s. 10 d. ob. Speed. 2215 l. Compend. Compert [e]. The tutelar ſaint of this cathedral and county was St. Cuthbert, whoſe body was magnificently enſhrined behind the high altar: But king Henry 8. named it The Cathedral Church of Chriſt and the bleſſed Virgin, upon his refounding and amply endowing it, anno regni 33. for a dean, twelve prebendaries, twelve minor canons, ſixteen lay ſinging men, and other officers and miniſters.

KYPIER or Kepire near Durham.

Randal biſhop of Durham built an hoſpital here, A. D. 1112. for a maſter and brethren, in honor of St. Giles, which, by the bounty of Hugh biſhop alſo of Durham, and other benefactors, was ſo well endowed as, 26 Hen. 8. to be rated at 186 l. 0 s. 10 d[b]. in the whole, and at 167 l. 2 s. 11 d. per ann. clear. It was ſurrendered Jan. 14. 36 Hen. 8. and granted that ſame year to Sr. Will. Paget.

FINCHALE.

The abovementioned biſhop Randal gave the heremitage here, before A. D. 1128. to the monks of Durham, by whoſe conſent the holy man Godric (afterwards canonized) enjoy'd the ſame many years, and devoted the place particularly to the ſervice of St. John Baptiſt. Upon Godric's death, A. D. 1170. ſome monks of Durham retired hither, and had ſome allowance made them towards their ſupport by the abovementioned Hugh[c] [de Puteaco] biſhop of Durham. Henry de Puteaco ſon to the biſhop, about the year A. D. 1196. very much increaſed the revenues, and thereupon a prior and monks of the Benedictine order, ſubordinate to Durham, were ſettled here. But their income is valued diſtinct, 26 Hen. 8. at 122 l. 15 s. 3 d. per ann. Dugd[d]. and at 146 l. 19 s. 2 d. as Speed. It then conſiſted of a prior and eight monks[e], and ſoon after the diſſolution was regranted to the dean and chapter of Durham.

BACTANESFORD.

Here was a monaſtery of Black canons from Giſburn, begun to be built by Henry Puſar or Pudſey ſon to the biſhop, but the monks of Durham oppoſed it ſo much, that, after his father's deceaſe, he deſiſted, and gave what he deſigned for this houſe to the eſtabliſhing a cell at Finchale, A. D. 1196.

Here was an hoſpital dedicated to the Holy Trinity, in the beginning of the reign of king Henry 3. to which Henry de Ferlinton gave his farm at Kyhou to find a chaplain, and maintain three poor men, as appears by Simon de Ferlinton's confirmation of his brother's gift, and the biſhop of Durham's deed thereupon.

NORTON near Stockton.

An ancient collegiate church, dedicated to St. Mary[b], of eight prebendaries or portioniſts, in the patronage of the biſhop of Durham. Leland[c] conjectures that theſe prebends and thoſe of Derlington and Aukland were founded by biſhop William de Carilepho, for the ſupport of the Secular canons, whom he removed out of the cathedral church of Durham. But the two latter colleges being known to be of later date, it may be preſumed that this of Norton was not ſo early; the firſt mention of prebends here, which hath yet occur'd to me, being A. D. 1227[d]. Theſe prebends were valued, in the Lincoln taxation, A. D. 1291. at 6 l. each; but 26 Hen. 8. at no more than 4 l. 6 s. 8 d. each, and 34 l. 13 s. 4 d[e]. in the whole

It was granted with all the lands belonging to it, 27 Hen. 6. to the prioreſs and nuns of St. Bartholomew's in Newcaſtle; yet is valued, 26 Hen. 8. as having in yearly revenues 109 l. 4 s. 4 d[h]. according to Speed; 5 l. 9 s. 4 d[h]. according to Dugdale; and 6 l. 2 s. 4 d. clear, according to the mſ. BISHOPS AUKLAND.

The church or chapel of St. Andrew here was made collegiate, and well endowed, by Antony Beck [c] biſhop of Durham. At the time of the Lincoln taxation, there were twelve portioniſts or prebendaries, and their revenues were then rated at 249 l. 13 s. 4 d. But the founder, in his ſtatutes made the next year, viz. A. D. 1292. appointed a dean and nine prebendaries only, and of that number there was ſome alteration made by Thomas biſhop of Durham, A. D. 1428. But there were again a dean and eleven prebendaries, 26 Hen. 8. when the deanry was valued at 100 l. 7 s. 2 d. and the eleven prebends [d] at 79 l. 16 s. 8 d [e].

But whether this took effect, I know not.

BEDE, in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, book iii. cap. 22. tells us, that Cedda biſhop of the Eaſt Saxons, about A. D. 630[c]. converted the inhabitants of this county to the faith of Chriſt, built churches in ſeveral places, and ordain'd prieſts and deacons to aſſiſt him in that great work; but eſpecially "in the city, which in the language of the Saxons is called Ythanceſtir; and alſo in that which is named Tillaburgh (the firſt of which places is on the bank of the river Pante, the other on the bank of the Thames;) where gathering a flock of ſervants of Chriſt, he taught them to obſerve the diſcipline of a regular life, as far as thoſe rude people were then capable". From hence Creſſy ſaith, he built monaſteries here; and Camden, Norden, and Newcourt ſay, he had his epiſcopal ſee at Weſt Tilbury. Wharton, in his account of Cedda, amongſt the biſhops of London, takes no notice of this, and as to Ythanceſtir, it hath been ſo long ſwallowed up in the river Pante, or (as it is now called) Frodſham, that there have not been any remains of it for many years; but it is ſuppoſed to have been where St. Peter's on the Wall now is, or near it.

BERKING, olim Berechinga or Bedenham[d].

ERKENWALD ſon of Anna king of the Eaſt Angles, and afterward biſhop of London, founded here a monaſtery of Religious virgins A. D. 675[e], which continued 'till the general diſſolution, *temp. MERCY or Weſt Mereſey[c].

THE monks of St. Audoen at Roan in Normandy had this manor by the gift of K. Edward the Confeſſor, upon which were ſettled here a convent of Benedictines, and it became a cell to that foreign abby. It was probably dedicated to St. Peter[d]. Upon the diſſolution of alien priories, K. Henry 5. granted this to Henry Chichely archbiſhop of Canterbury, who made it part of the endowment of the collegiate church by him, founded at Higham-ferrers in Northamptonſhire, the place of the nativity of that worthy prelate; and, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of that college, it was granted, 34 Hen. 8. to Robert Dacres eſquire.

Stevens blames Mr. Willis for ſaying this abby maintained about twenty monks, and ſaith, it is more likely to have had double that number, none of the greater abbies having ſo few as twenty. CHICH.

If there be any truth in the legendary writers, this was the moſt ancient monaſtery in this county, here being, as they ſay, a nunnery dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, built by Oſitha, daughter of K. Frithwald, and queen to Sighere king of the Eaſt Saxons, who herſelf lived as a Religious herein, till ſhe was martyred by the Danes A. D. 653 [a]. It is more certain that, before 1118 [b]. Richard de Belmeis, the firſt of that name, biſhop of London, in honor of thoſe two great apoſtles, and the ſaid holy woman St. Oſith, built a religious houſe here for canons of the order of St. Auſtin. This abby was endowed, 26 Hen. 8. with lands to the yearly value of 677 l. 1 s. 2 d. Dugd. 758 l. 5 s. 8 d. Speed [c]; and the ſite of it was granted, 31 Hen. 8. to Thomas lord Cromwell, and after his attainder to Sr. Tho. Darcy, 5 Ed. 6. who was that year made a baron by the title of lord Darcy of Chich.

LITTLE WALDEN or Saffron Walden near Chipping.

A PRIORY of Benedictine monks was founded here by Jeffry Mandevil, the firſt earl of Eſſex after the Conqueſt, to the honor of St. Mary and St. James, in the year of our Lord 1136. In the time of K. Richard 1. it became an abby, and was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 372 l. 18 s. 1 d. per ann. Dugd. 406 l. 15 s. 11 d. Speed. Upon the ſuppreſſion it was granted to Sr. Tho. Audley, who was thereupon, 29 Hen. 8. created a baron, by the title of Lord Audley of Walden. Upon the ſite of this monaſtery the earl of Suffolk, temp. Jac. 1. built that ſtately manſion called Audley-inn.

HATFIELD REGIS or Brodeoke[a].

AUBREY DE VERE, the ſecond of that name[b], father to the earl of Oxford, before A. D. 1140[c]. gave the church of St. Mary here to the monks of St. Melanius[d] at Redon in Britany, upon which it probably became a cell to that foreign abby. Aubrey Vere the third[e], or his ſecond ſon Robert earl of Oxford[f], might increaſe the revenues, and make it an independent priory of Black monks, for as ſuch it continued till the ſuppreſſion; about which time here were nine monks, and its yearly income was valued at 122 l. 13 s. 2 d. ob. Dugd. 157 l. 3 s. 2 d. ob. Speed. The ſite of this houſe was granted, 32 Hen. 8. to Tho. Noke.

[a] So the chronicle of this houſe; tho' the foundation of it is placed A. D. 1140. by Weaver, ex Chron. S. Aug. Cant. A. D. 1141. Leland. Collect. i. 63. A. D. 1137. Annales de Parcolude, mſ.

[b] Not White monks of the Cluniac order, as Weaver and Newcourt; for the Cluniacs were all Black monks. The famous pat. roll of 22 Ed. 1. and other evidence ſhew this houſe to have been of the Ciſtertian order.

[c] This priory or hoſpital, being founded in the wood of Ginges, was ſometimes called Ginge or Gingeattaſton priory, tho' it is in the pariſh of Ginge Mountney or Munnaſynge; and the ſame was more generally called Thoby, perhaps from Tobias the firſt prior; ſo that they are not two diſtinct monaſteries, as in Speed.

HERE was firſt an heremitage[e], and then a priory of Black canons, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, built and endowed by Maurice Fitz Jeffrey[f] of Tiretai ſheriff of Eſſex, at the charge, for the moſt part, of K. Henry 2. who forgave him on this account ſeveral ſums of money, which otherwiſe he muſt have paid into the Exchequer out of the ferms and profits of his bailywic[g]. This houſe, being almoſt forſaken, was, about the latter end of the time of[h] K. Henry 7. annexed to St. Mary Spittle without Biſhopſgate, London; and, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of that hoſpital, was granted, after the general diſſolution, viz. 31 Hen. 8. to Henry Polſted.

[a] Tiltey and Woodham were accounted the ſame in the firſt edition of this work, on the authority of the Monaſt. vol. i. p. 889. but in the ſurrender of Tiltey abby (Rymer, xiv. 558.) there is no mention of Woodham; and the great diſtance of ſituation, and the difference in the dedication and orders, are a conſiderable proof of their being different houſes, beſides what will be offered under the next houſe.

[b] “Maurice Ingliſh, ſometime earl of Eſſex”, ſaith Speed, ex Leland. Collect. i. p. 63. But if he was the ſame with Maurice de Tiretai, he was only vicecomes, not comes Eſſex. Camden and Weaver call him Maurice Fitz Gilbert.

[c] So the St. Werburgh's Chronicle, and the Burton Annals. The mſ. chronicle of Louth-park ſaith, A. D. 1153. but the Monaſt. vol. ii. p. 75. ſeems to place it as low as A. D. 1188.

[d] From Wodeham and Bikinacre's having the ſame founder, the ſame dedication, and the nearneſs of Woodham to Danbury where Bikinacre was, there is great reaſon to think them the ſame. And I am confirm'd in this opinion by Mr. Bowyer's abſtract of the patent rolls, mſ. in biblioth. officii Armorum, f. 823. where the patent 27 Hen. 6. p. 1. m. 12. STANESGATE in the pariſh of Steeple.

HERE was a priory of monks of the Cluniac order founded, as Mr. Speed has it, by the predeceſſors of the priors of Lewes, to which monaſtery it was ſubordinate. St. Mary Magdalen was the tutelar ſaint of this houſe, which was in being A. D. 1176. and made prioratus indigena temp. Ed. 3. but was ſuppreſſed by cardinal Wolſey 18 Hen. 8. when its ſpiritualties were valued at 5 l. 0 s. 3 d. and its temporalties at 38 l. 8 s. 3 d. Upon the cardinal's attainder, this cell was granted, in conſideration of the exchange of ſome other lands, to the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, and after, 35 Hen. 8. as parcel of their poſſeſſions, to Edm. Mordaunt.

AUBREY DE VERE, third of the name, and firſt earl of Oxford, or, as ſome think [d], rather his counteſs Lucia, who became firſt prioreſs [e], built a ſmall Benedictine nunnery here before the year 1190. to the honor of the Holy Croſs, St. Mary, and St. James [f]. It had five nuns about the time of the ſuppreſſion, and lands valued only at 29 l. 12 s. 10 d. per ann. Dugd. MONASTERIUM CORNUTUM, Hornechurch or Havering.

K. HENRY 2. having given the church of Havering, and ſome other revenues hereabout, to the great hoſpital de Monte Jovis in Savoy [g], a cell for a prior or maſter and poor brethren [h], ſubordinate to that foreign houſe, was ſettled here, and dedicated to St. Nicholas and St. Bernard. This houſe was, temp. Ric. 2. by the leave of the pope, king, etc. bought by William Wickham biſhop of Wincheſter for his New college in Oxford.

[a][a] Berkyng and Ilford were not diſtinct hoſpitals, as in Speed.

[b] So the learned Mr. Willis (Hiſt. of Abbies, vol. ii. p. 76.) out of a mſ. in muſeo Aſhmol. And it is evident from the Monaſt. tom. ii. p. 391. that this hoſpital was in being temp. R. Joan. when William was biſhop of London, and Mabilia de Boſeham abbeſs of Berkyng.

[c][c] So in ſome of the charters in Mon. Angl. i. 1021.

[d] There is ſome ground for this in the letter miſſive of her ſucceſſor prioreſs Agnes, in Weaver. But in the charter of Albery Vere the ſon, wherein he confirms and augments the grant of his father, there is no mention made of this Lucia his mother, nor in any other charter printed in the Monaſticon. As for the other founders mentioned in Speed, there is no ground for accounting them ſuch; but only as there was a chantry erected in this priory to pray for the ſouls of Sr. John Hawkwood the famous ſoldier (born in the pariſh of Sible Heningham) and of Oliver and Newenton his comrades.

[e] See Weaver, and Mr. Hearne's preface to vol. v. of Leland's Itin. p. xxvii.

An heremitage[a] or priory of Black canons built by Adam[b] and Jordan de Samford, to the honor of St. Laurence, before or in the beginning of king John's reign. This was one of the ſmall monaſteries which cardinal Wolſey procured to be diſſolved 17 Hen. 8. in order to the endowment of his two colleges at Oxford and Ipſwich, at which time the earl of Oxford claimed to be founder, and it was valued at 85 l. 9 s. 7 d. per ann. viz. in ſpiritualties, 41 l. 13 s. 4 d. and in temporalties 43 l. 11 s. 3 d. Upon the attainder of the cardinal, this priory was granted in exchange, 23 Hen. 8. to Waltham abby; and, after the general ſuppreſſion, to John Smith, 32 Hen. 8.

Wulphere the firſt Chriſtian king of Mercia is ſaid to have begun[b], and Ethelred[c] his brother and ſucceſſor (who was afterward monk and abbat of Bardney) to have carried on and finiſhed, about the year of Chriſt 680. a monaſtery here to the honor of St. Peter, chiefly by the care of Oſric his nephew[d], and at that time his viceroy in theſe parts, but afterward king of Northumberland. There were probably Religious of both ſexes in it, under the government of an abbeſs, and this church was honored by having three queens ſucceſſively preſiding over it above ninety years: After which, by reaſon of the civil wars and other iniquities of thoſe times, this monaſtery became deſolate, and continued ſo fifty years, when, about A. D. 823. K. Bernulph placed herein Secular prieſts, who were turned out and Benedictine monks put in A. D. 1022. by the command of K. Canute, at the inſtigation of Wolſtan biſhop of Worceſter. His ſucceſſor biſhop Aldred, about the year 1058. new built the abby church in a place nearer the city than it formerly ſtood; and, after the Conqueſt, abbat Serlo the Conqueror's chaplain, much increaſed the number of monks and the revenues of this monaſtery, which amounted, at the diſſolution, to 1946 l. 5 s. 9 d. per ann. Dugd[e]. 1550 l. 4 s. 5 d. ob. Speed. This church, A. D. 1541. was made one of the new erected cathedrals of K. Henry 8. dedicated to the Holy and Undivided Trinity; and the ſite, with great part of the lands of the abby, were granted for the habitations and maintenance of the biſhop, a dean, an archdeacon, and ſix prebendaries, ſix Minor canons, ſix lay clerks, eight choriſters, two maſters, etc.

TETTAN,

TETTAN, Tetteburi, or Tetbury.

Amongſt the donations to the abby of Malmſbury, A. D. 680. there is a gift of fifteen caſſates of land, " juxta Tettan monaſterium ;" or, as it is in the confirmation both of the deed and gift, " juxta Tetteburi," which ſeems to imply that there was then a religious houſe at this place, tho' we have no farther account of it.

Vide Mon. Angl. tom. i. p. 51.

THEOKESBURY or Tewkeſbury.

A monaſtery here firſt built and endowed by two brothers, Oddo and Doddo, dukes of Mercia, A. D. 715. to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, which having undergone many calamities during the civil and Daniſh wars, about the year 980. became a priory ſubject to Cranburn in Dorſetſhire. But Robert Fitz Haimon, a noble Norman, who came in with William the Conqueror, enlarged the buildings and increaſed the poſſeſſions of Teukeſbury ſo much, that the monks of Canburn choſe, about A. D. 1102. to remove hither and make this the head houſe. After which it became a great abby of Benedictine monks, who at the ſuppreſſion were poſſeſſed of revenues yearly worth 1598 l. 1 s. 3 d. Dugd. Speed ; or, according to the valuation in Burnet, 1595 l. 15 s. 6 d[a]. The ſite of this monaſtery was granted, 36 Hen. 8. to Tho. Strowde, Walt. Erle, and Ja. Paget.

DAEGLESFORD or Deilesford.

Ethelbald king of Mercia gave this place, A. D. 718. to one Begia, that a monaſtery might be built here. This was granted afterwards to the church of Worceſter, firſt by Beortwulf, and then by Ceolwulf kings of Mercia. But in king Edward the Confeſſor's time the monks of Eveſham obtained it by the gift of duke Aelſgar, and kept it till the diſſolution.

DEREHURSTE.

Doddo [a] the duke or chief nobleman of Mercia, one of the founders of Tewkeſbury, who became himſelf a monk at Perſhore, is ſaid to have built a monaſtery [b] here to the honor of the Virgin Mary, and in memory of his brother Almaric here buried; which was after deſtroy'd by the Danes, but rebuilt again and repleniſh'd with monks before the year 980 [c]. K. Edward the Confeſſor gave it, with all the lands belonging thereunto, to the abby of St. Dennis in France, to which it became a cell of Benedictine monks. It had eight lordſhips, and was accounted worth three hundred marks by the year, when it was ſold by the abbat and convent of St. Dennis to Richard earl of Cornwal A. D. 1250 [d]. Upon the wars with France, and the ſeiſure of alien priories, this was made "prioratus indigena," 21 Hen. 6. but this denization was afterward annulled; and that king granted this priory to Eaton college anno regni 25 [e]. But K. Edw. 4. revoked that grant, and gave it firſt to Fodringhey college, then reſtored it to Eaton, and then to Tewkeſbury abby, who, after many diſputes [f], held it as a cell [g] till the diſſolution, and, as parcel of Tewkeſbury, it was granted, 34 Hen. 8. to William Throckmorton.

WINCHELCOMB.

K. Offa is ſaid to have built a nunnery here A. D. 787. and in the ſame place, A. D. 798. K. Kenulph laid the foundation of a ſtately abby for three hundred monks, and commended it to the patronage of the bleſſed Virgin Mary; but, in proceſs of time, it came into the poſſeſſion of Seculars, or otherwiſe was almoſt wholly decayed; when, A. D. 985[a]. Oſwald biſhop of Worceſter reformed the diſcipline, and recovered the lands of this religious houſe, which was dedicated to St. Kenelm (the martyr'd ſon of the founder) and continued in the poſſeſſion of Benedictine monks till the general diſſolution, when it was rated at 759 l. 11 s. 9 d. per ann. and granted, 1 Ed. 6. to Sr. Tho. Seymour; 4 Ed. 6. to Will. marquis of Northampton; and 1 Mar. to John lord Chandos.

HEANBIRI or Henbury.

There was an ancient monaſtery at a place of this name, but I take it to have been at Hanbury in Worceſterſhire. But this church was probably one of the prebends of Weſtbury.

WESTBURY ON TRIN or TRYMME[a], olim Weſtminſter[b].

A monastery here is mentioned in the acts of the ſynod of Cloveſho A. D. 824[c]. which, with ſeveral lands hereabouts, was given by Ethelric ſon of Ethelmund, after the death of his mother, to Worceſter. But Oſwald biſhop of that ſee, A. D. 983[d]. replaced the monks, who being partly removed to Ramſey[e], and partly driven away by the wars, this religious houſe was, A. D. 1093. re-edified to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin, the old poſſeſſions were recovered, new were added, and the monks reſtored by Wulſtan[f] biſhop of Worceſter, who made it a cell to the priory of Worceſter. But his ſucceſſor, biſhop Sampſon, temp. Hen. 1. revoked the ſaid grants, and removed the monks. From which time nothing occurs of any religious houſe in this place till about A. D. 1288. when Godfrey Giffard biſhop of Worceſter endeavoured to make ſeveral churches in theſe parts of the patronage of the ſee of Worceſter prebendal to this of Weſtbury, which, after great oppoſition from the prior and convent of Worceſter, he effected[g], and here became a college for a dean and canons (in the gift of the biſhop of Worceſter) dedicated to the Holy Trinity[h]; which was afterward augmented by the benefactions of John Carpenter biſhop of Worceſter[i], who ſometimes ſtyled himſelf biſhop of Weſtbury, Richard duke of York[k], K. Edward 4. Sr. William Cannings knt[l]. who was afterwards dean here, and others, ſo as to be valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 232 l. 14 s. 0 d. q. per ann. Dugd. Speed; and was granted, 35 Hen. 8. to Sr. Ralph Sadler.

BECCANFORD or Bekeford.

Here probably was the other Saxon monaſtery about which the conteſt was in the ſynod of Cloveſho, A. D. 803. between the biſhops of Worceſter and Hereford[m]. It is more certain that this manor being given temp. Hen. 1. to the abby of St. Martin and St. Barbara in Normandy, commonly called St. Barbe en Auge[n], by Rabellus Camerarius; a prior and canons were ſent over, and it became a cell to that foreign houſe, which was of the order of St. Auſtin. Upon the ſuppreſſion of alien priories, this was beſtowed by K. Henry 6. on Eaton college, when it was reckoned to them at the yearly value of 53 l. 6 s. 8 d [a]. but afterwards, by king Edward 4. on Fodringhey. And, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of this laſt mentioned college, it was granted, 1 Ed. 6. to Sr. Richard Lee.

BERKLEY.

Here was an old religious houſe long before the Conqueſt, which might be the Family æt Beꞃclea mentioned in the acts of another ſynod at Cloveſho, A. D. 824 [b]. But it is more doubtful whether it conſiſted of monks, as Mr. Collier [c], or nuns [d], who were ſuppreſſed by the villany of earl Godwin, temp. Edw. Conf. as related by Camden, and others out of Walter Mapes.

GLOCESTER.

Some of the legendary writers report that Merwald [e] viceroy of the weſtern part of Mercia, and his wife Domneva did, about the year 660. build a ſtately monaſtery here in honor of St. Oſwald the king and martyr. It is more certain that, A. D. 909. Ethelred earl of Mercia, and the famous Elfleda (daughter of K. Alfred) his counteſs, tranſlating the relicks of that canonized prince from Bardney to this place, founded here a religious houſe, from whence the monks being forced to fly in the Daniſh wars, it became a college of Secular prieſts, which was accounted a free chapel royal, exempt from the juriſdiction of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, or the biſhop of Worceſter; but K. William Rufus gave it to the archbiſhops of York in lieu of their claims to Lindeſy and ſome parts of Lincolnſhire [f], which they quitted to the biſhop of Lincoln. Henry Murdac archbiſhop of York, A. D. 1153 [g]. placed here Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin [h], who continued till the diſſolution, at which time here were about ſeven of them, and their revenues were valued at 90 l. 10 s. 2 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. [a] An unwillingneſs to omit any Religious houſe mentioned in Speed and later writers, is the occaſion of my inſerting this, for which I have yet met with no good authority. Sr. Robert Atkyns, and from him the editor of the Magn. Britan. Antiq. et Nov. confound this with the houſe of Dominicans or Black friers, in the pariſh of St. Mary Cript, which order was not in being till ſome hundred years after Ethelſtan.

WOOD CHESTER.

Gueta wife to earl Godwin is ſaid to have built a Religious houſe here to make amends for her huſband's fraud at Berkley [c].

NOENT, Newent, or Newenton.

King William the Conqueror, at the inſtance of Roger of Montgomery, gave this manor to the abbat and convent of Corneile in Normandy, who thereupon ſent over a prior and ſome Benedictine monks, and it became a cell to that foreign monaſtery. When, during the wars with France, this alien priory was ſeized by the king, it was farmed at one hundred and ninety marks by the year, and, after the ſuppreſſion of theſe houſes, was granted by K. Henry 4. and K. Henry 5. to the collegiate church of Fodringhey in Northamptonſhire; and, as parcel thereof, 1 Ed. 6. to Sr. Richard Lee.

LECHELADE.

A PRIORY of Black canons[a], or rather an hoſpital of a maſter or prior and certain poor and infirm brethren, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, was founded here upon a piece of ground called Lade, near the great bridge over the Thames, (from hence called St. John's bridge) given to that good uſe by the lady Iſabel Ferrers[b], ſometime wife of Hugh Mortimer, before 30 Hen. 3. But this houſe being run into great decay, K. Edward 4. anno regni 12. gave his mother Cicely ducheſs of York leave to get it diſſolved, and then to apply the revenues of it to the endowing of a perpetual chantry of three prieſts at the altar of St. Mary in the pariſh church here, which continued till dean Underwood[c], temp. Hen. 7. found means to place two of theſe chantry prieſts at Walingford college, and let the third remain at Lechlade; and ſo the ſite of this priory, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of Walingford college, was granted to Dennis Tappes 14 Eliz.

HAMPSHIRE.

WINCHESTER, Old-minſter.

HERE is ſaid to have been a monaſtery very early, founded by K. Lucius, for monks following the rule of St. Mark [f], which was deſtroyed in Diocletian's perſecution, A. D. 266 [g]. but reſtored under Deodatus the abbat in honor of St. Amphibalus [h], about the year 300. after which it continued above two hundred years, till the monks were killed, and their church turned into a Pagan temple, for the idolatrous worſhip of Dagon, by Cerdic king of the Weſt Saxons [i]. Theſe and other matters relating to Religious men in this city being ſo particularly and poſitively aſſerted by Rudburn and the Wincheſter annaliſt could not well be here omitted, tho' they ſeem to be very fabulous. It is more likely that Kynegilſe, the firſt Chriſtian king of the Weſt Saxons, began a cathedral church here [k], which might be finiſhed by his ſucceſſor Kinewalcus, and monks placed herein by biſhop Birin in the year 646. Theſe were deſtroyed by the Danes A. D. 867 [l]. and in the next year Secular prieſts took poſſeſſion of this church and the lands belonging to it, and kept the ſame till A. D. 963. when biſhop Ethelwold, by the command of K. Edgar, expelled them, and placed here monks of the order of St. Benedict brought from Abendon. This church was anciently dedicated to the Holy Trinity [m], or to St. Peter [n], or, as others, to St. Birin, St. Swithin, and St. Ethelwold [o]; but in later times St. Swithin the biſhop was chiefly accounted the tutelar ſaint of this priory, which was generally diſtinguiſhed by his name. It was endowed, at the general ſuppreſſion, with 1507 l. 17 s. 2 d. per ann. Dugd. Speed; after which the ſite and great part of the revenues were ſettled by K. Henry 8. anno regni 32. on a dean and twelve prebendaries, for whom, and the ſix minor canons, ten lay clerks, eight choriſters, and other members, this cathedral was then refounded, and dedicated to the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

REDBRIDGE.

Here, as Mr. Camden thinks, was that ancient monaſtery under the abbat Cimberth, about the year 680. called by Bede[a], Reodford, i. e. Arundinis Vadum.

WINCHESTER, Nunnaminſter[b].

In the eaſt part of this city was a nunnery built[c] or rather begun by K. Alfred or his queen Alſwitha[d], about the end of the ninth century, and finiſhed by their ſon K. Edward the Elder[d]. This houſe was alſo new modelled and enlarged by biſhop Ethelwold[e]. It was of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin and St. Edburg[f], daughter of the ſaid K. Edward, who was a nun, and, as ſome ſay, abbeſs here[g]. The yearly revenues of this abby, 26 Hen. 8. amounting to no more than 179 l. 7 s. 2 d[h]. per ann. Dugd. Speed, it was liable to be diſſolved in 27 Hen. 8. c. 28. but the king, by his letters patents dated 17 Auguſt, anno regni 28. continued the abbeſs and nuns, and the whole houſe in the ſame ſtate (with the loſs of a manor or two) as it was at the beginning of that ſeſſion of parliament. However, this houſe was three years after ſurrendered into the king's hands, when the abbeſs and twenty one nuns[i] had penſions; and great part of the abby, if not the whole, was granted, 38 Hen. 8. to John Bello and John Broxholme.

WINCHESTER, Newminſter.

K. Alfred founded here firſt only a houſe and chapel[l] for the learned monk Grimbald, whom he had brought out of Flanders, but afterwards projected[m], and by his will ordered a noble church or Religious houſe to be built in the cimitery on the north ſide of the old minſter or cathedral, and deſigned that Grimbald ſhould preſide over it. This was begun A. D. 901. and finiſhed to the honor of the Holy Trinity, Virgin Mary, and St. Peter, by his ſon K. Edward, who placed therein Secular canons; but A. D. 963. they were expelled, and an abbat and monks put into poſſeſſion by the often mentioned biſhop Ethelwold[n]. Now the churches and habitations of theſe two ſocieties being ſo very near together, the differences, which were occaſioned by their ſinging, bells, and other matters, aroſe to ſo great height, that the Religious of the new monaſtery thought fit, about A. D. 1110. to remove to a better and more quiet ſituation without the walls, on the north part of the city, called

CARESBROOKE in the Iſle of Wight.

WILLIAM FITZ OSBERN, kinſman and marſhal to K. William the Conqueror, and earl of Hereford, having founded [a] the abby of Lyre in Normandy, endowed the ſame about A. D. 1071. with ſeveral poſſeſſions in England, among others, with the church of St. Mary [b] in Careſbrook, wherein a prior and ſome Black monks from that foreign monaſtery were ſoon after ſettled. This alien priory, with all its poſſeſſions, was ſeized by K. Edward 1. and 3. and by K. Richard 2. it was given, during the wars with France, to the abby of Mountgrace in Yorkſhire. K. Henry 4. reſtored it to its own prior, but being diſſolved by act of parliament, temp. Hen. 5. that king granted it to the Charter houſe at Shene, by him founded.

WINCHESTER.

Without the walls, toward the ſouth weſt, ſtands the houſe or hoſpital of St. Croſs[a]; founded by Henry de Blois biſhop of Wincheſter and brother to K. Stephen, A. D. 1132[b]. for the whole maintenance of thirteen poor brethren in lodging, clothing, and diet, and for the dining of one hundred poor perſons every day. It was at firſt governed by a prior, and put under the management of the maſter and Knights Hoſpitalers of St. John of Jeruſalem, who quitted their intereſt herein upon valuable conſiderations, A. D. 1185[c]. when Richard biſhop of Wincheſter made proviſion for the dining of another hundred poor perſons. There were then herein, beſides the poor, a maſter and four chaplains in the nomination of the lord biſhop of Wincheſter. A conſiderable addition was made temp. Hen. 6. to the old foundation both in buildings and revenues, to the yearly value of 158 l. 13 s. 4 d. by cardinal Beaufort, or his executors, for a rector, two chaplains, thirty five poor men, and three poor women. Yet the whole annual income of this hoſpital, 26 Hen. 8. was return'd but 84 l. 4 s. 2 d. Dugd. 184 l. 4 s. 2 d. Speed[d]. This well endowed houſe is ſtill in being, and at preſent under the care of the reverend Dr. Markland maſter.

MOTISFONT.

A PRIORY of Auſtin canons founded by William Briwere[a], in the beginning of K. John's reign, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The number of Religious, which, by the foundation, were to be eleven, being reduced to three A. D. 1494. K. Henry 7. procured a bull from pope Alexander to ſuppreſs it, deſigning firſt to change it into a collegiate church for a dean and prebendaries; afterward to annex it to a chantry and hoſpital he was about to build at Windſor; but again changing his mind, and erecting that ſtately new chapel at Weſtminſter, the abbat and convent had leave, A. D. 1500. to take poſſeſſion of this monaſtery: Yet neither of theſe attempts ſeems to have taken effect; but this houſe continued till the general ſuppreſſion, when therein were a prior and ten canons, endowed with 124 l. 3 s. 5 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 167 l. 15 s. 8 d. ob. Speed; and, 28 Hen. 8. it was granted, in exchange for other eſtates, to William lord Sandys.

[a] Founded by Ranulph Flambard biſhop of Durham, Richard de Ripariis earl of Devon, and Will. de Brewere, temp. Will. Ruſi. Speed. So alſo the author of Magn. Britan. Antiq. et Nov. makes that biſhop of Durham to have founded four monks in this houſe of canons; of which there is no mention in the Angl. Sacr. among the acts of that biſhop. It was in the patronage of Maud daughter and heireſs of Patric de Cadurcis, then a minor. Pat. 22 Ed. 1. And ſhortly after Henry earl of Lancaſter was patron, as reg. Winton.

[c] Matth. Paris in anno 1238.

[d] Mr. Speed adds alſo a college here, founded by this biſhop; of which I can give at preſent no account, having met with no other authority for it. The head of this hoſpital was ſometimes called the prior. Pat. 22 Ed. 3. This houſe was in the patronage of the biſhop of Wincheſter, temp. Joannis de Pontiſſara epiſc. as mſ. Rivers.

WINCHESTER.

The fore mentioned Peter de Rupibus or de la Roch biſhop of Wincheſter is ſaid alſo to have firſt placed the Dominican or Preaching friers here in this city after A. D. 1221 [a]. Their houſe or college ſtood ſomewhat north within the town [b], and was granted in exchange, 35 Hen. 8. to the warden and fellows of Wickham's college here.

TYCHFEILD.

The ſaid biſhop Peter de Rupibus having obtained of K. Henry 3. a grant of this manor, built an abby here for Premonſtratenſian canons [c], to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, A. D. 1231 [d]. At the ſuppreſſion there were an abbat and twelve canons in it, endowed with 249 l. 16 s. 1 d. per ann. Dugd. 280 l. 19 s. 10 d. ob. Speed. It was granted, 29 Hen. 8. to Sr. Tho. Wriotheſley, who built here "a right ſtately houſe [e]".

Two merchants being brethren, one called Gervaſius, (perhaps Gervaſe of Hampton[h]) the other, Protaſius, cauſed the houſe wherein they dwelt in the ſouth eaſt corner of this town to be turned into an hoſpital for poor folks, and endowed it with ſome lands temp. Hen. 3. This was augmented by ſeveral benefactors; its chapel is dedicated to St. Julian, from whence it is often called the hoſpital of St. Julian, but generally God's houſe. The patronage and maſterſhip was given by K. Edward 3. at the inſtance of his queen Philippa, to the provoſt and fellows of Queen's hall or college in Oxford, which ſhe had founded, in whom it continues to this day.

That munificent prelate William of Wykeham biſhop of Wincheſter, about the year 1387. began to build in the ſouth ſuburb of this city a new and noble college to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, which was to conſiſt of a warden, ten perpetual chaplains or fellows, and ſeventy ſcholars in grammar, beſides conducts, clerks, choriſters, etc. It was, 26 Hen. 8. endowed with lands worth 628 l. 13 s. 6 d. per ann. Dugd. 639 l. 8 s. 7 d. Speed; and being particularly excepted in the act 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. for the diſſolution of colleges, it flouriſheth to this day, and is an excellent ſeminary for that other ample foundation of the ſaid biſhop Wykeham, S. Mary Wincheſter, commonly called New college in the univerſity of Oxford.

FERNLEGA[a], Fernalege[b], or Hereford.

Here was a biſhop's ſee erected, and a dioceſe taken out of Litchfield, aſſigned to it as early as A. D. 680. But Milefred[c], king of the Mercians, founded the firſt cathedral church about A. D. 825. to the honor of St. Ethelbert[d] king and martyr, who was here buried[e]; which being decayed, or deſtroy'd by the wars, as alſo a ſecond built by biſhop Athelſtan[f], a third cathedral was begun by biſhop Loſing[g], temp. Will. Conq. and by the piety and charity of ſeveral conſiderable benefactors, finiſhed as we now have it, and ſo well endowed as to maintain a biſhop, dean, two archdeacons, a chancellor, treaſurer, twenty eight prebendaries, twelve prieſt vicars, four lay clerks, ſeven choriſters, and other officers. The revenues of the biſhopric were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 831 l. 4 s. 1 d[h]. viz. the ſpiritualties at 83 l. 6 s. 3 d. and the temporalties at 747 l. 17 s. 10 d. But the repriſes amounting to 62 l. 13 s. 6 d. the clear value was only 768 l. 10 s. 7 d. and the common revenues of the dean and reſidentiaries were 423 l. 17 s. 2 d[i]. per ann. and 88 l. 14 s. 9 d. ob. to be divided amongſt twenty vicars choral.

LEOMINSTER or Lemſter, olim Leonis Monaſterium[a], Leof[b], or Llanlienis[c].

Merwald king of the weſtern part of Mercia firſt built a monaſtery here to the honor of St. Peter[d], about A. D. 660. which being deſtroyed in the Daniſh Wars, here was a college of prebendaries[e], and after an abby of nuns, who were all diſperſed, and their lands poſſeſſed by laymen long before the year 1125[f]. when K. Henry 1. gave this monaſtery, with every thing belonging to it, to the ſtately new abby which he had founded at Reading in Berkſhire. After this it became a cell of Benedictine monks, ſubordinate thereunto, and was, A. D. 1536. endowed with the yearly revenue of 660 l. 16 s. 8 d. out of which there was paid to Reading and in other repriſes to the value of 448 l. 4 s. 8 d[g]. LENA[h], Monekeſlen, Monkenlane or Munkland.

Ralph Tony the elder having given, 1 *Will. It was ſometime reckoned as parcel of the alien priory of Wotton-wawen in Warwickſhire, and as ſuch was granted, during the wars with France, to the Carthuſians at Coventry, 22 Ric. 2. but, after the ſuppreſſion, this priory of Monkenlane, with all its appurtenances, was annexed to the dean and chapter of Windſor, 13 Ed. 4.

EWIAS HARALDI.

Harald lord of Ewias gave the church of St. Michael, etc. here, A. D. 1100. to the abby of St. Peter in Gloceſter, upon condition that there ſhould be a prior and ſmall convent of Black monks from thence ſettled here, as there was for many years, till the revenues falling ſo much in value as not to be able to ſupport this cell, it was, A. D. 1358. by decree of Thomas biſhop of St. David's then ordinary[i], with the conſent of the chapter, united and incorporated to the ſaid great abby of Gloceſter[k].

But from Eadfrid, who converted the founder to chriſtianity, being made head of this religious houſe, it is more probable that it was originally for men; and I chuſe to place the Secular prieſts here before the nuns, who were here laſt before the Conqueſt and diſſolution; as is evident from Swane earl Godwin's ſon corrupting Eggiva the abbeſs here, 1 Ed. WIGMORE[a].

A SMALL college of three prebendaries founded in the parochial church here A. D. 1100. by Ralph de Mortimer, which dropped upon the founding of the abby. This owed its foundation originally to the directions which the ſaid Ralph left upon his death-bed with his ſon and heir Sr. Hugh de Mortimer; purſuant whereunto Sr. Oliver de Merlimound their ſteward began a Religious houſe at Scobbedon or Shobdene, temp. Hen. 1. and having made ſome ſmall endowment procured a prior and two canons from St. Victor at Paris to come hither. The want of water, and other inconveniencies made them remove to Eye near Aylmyſter upon the river Lugg. Hence they went to Wigmore, then to Beodune, and back again to Shobdon, but were finally ſettled A. HEREFORD.

The hoſpital of St. Antony at Vienna had a grant of the church of All Saints in Hereford, and the chapel of St. Martin there, per cart. 33 Hen. 3. m. 2. and thereupon probably had ſome of their houſe here to collect their dues, who might live together and form themſelves into a ſmall hoſpital; for the maſter of the hoſpital of St. Antony at Hereford had the king's letters of protection, 22 Ed. 1. as Prynne, vol. iii. p. 590, 591.

BROMYARD.

Three canons[h], prebendaries[i], or portioniſts[k] in the church here occur as ancient as 53 Hen. 3. in the gift of the biſhops of Hereford. Hence it was frequently ſtyled a collegiate church or college[l], and as ſuch was granted, 14 Eliz. to one Will. Jeames.

DE LA PRAY, St. Mary de Pree, or De Pratis, juxta S. Albanum.

As there had been built at St. Julian's a place for leprous men, ſo about A. D. 1190. Garinus or Warine, abbat of St. Alban's, thought fit in the adjoining meadows to found a houſe or hoſpital for poor ſick and leprous women dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin; which in proceſs of time became ſo well endowed, that in it were maintained a prioreſs and ſeveral nuns of the order of St. Benedict. Cardinal Wolſey, commendatory abbat of St. Alban's, A. D. 1528. procured a bull from P. Clement 8. for the ſuppreſſing this nunnery, and annexing the ſame to the monaſtery of St. Alban's; but 6 Jun. 20 Hen. 8. he obtained a grant of it with all the lands thereunto belonging for himſelf[c]. After his attainder the king put it off by way of exchange to St. Alban's abby[d], and, as parcel thereof, it was granted, 32 Hen. 8. to Ralph Rowlet eſquire.

CHILLE and CHILTRE.

Two houſes of Black nuns mentioned to have been in this county in the old catalogue of Religious houſes aſcribed to Gervaſe of Canterbury, mſ. Corp. Chriſt. coll. Cant. and alſo in Speed: But I have yet found nothing farther of them in any other authors printed or mſ. Sr. H. Chauncy, p. 371. mentions a manor called Cheles, belonging to the Hoſpitalers.

BERKHAMSTEDE.

Here were, in the time of K. John [a], two hoſpitals of poor and infirm perſons, one dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, and the other (which was of both brothers and ſiſters lepers) to St. John the evangeliſt: The cuſtody of both which was granted by Jeffry Fitz Pierce earl of Eſſex to the houſe of St. Thomas of Acon in London. There was alſo in this town, temp. Ed. 2. an hoſpital of St. Thomas the martyr [b]. Upon the diſſolution, St. John the Evangeliſt Spittle, or Le Over Spittle houſe, and Le Nether Spittle houſe [c], or St. Leonard's Spittle (which was at the ſouth eaſt end of the high ſtreet [d]) with all the lands belonging to them in North Church, Hemelhamſted, etc. were granted, 36 Hen. 8. to Robert Hordem. Sr. Henry Chauncy [e] mentions alſo an old hoſpital called St. James's, from St. James's Well at the farther end of the high ſtreet.

WARE, olim Waras or Guaris.

Hugo de Grentemaisnil, who was lord of this town and had other great poſſeſſions in theſe parts, gave, before A. D. 1081. to the monks of St. Ebrulf at Utica in Normandy[a], the church of St. Mary here, with the tithes thereunto belonging, and two carucates of land. Whereupon it became a cell to that abby, and, in proceſs of time, was ſo well endowed, that upon the ſeiſure of the alien priories by K. Edward 3. during the wars with France, this was farmed at 200 l. per ann. After the ſuppreſſion of theſe foreign houſes this was given, 3 Hen. 5. to the monks at Shene. K. Henry 6. for ſome time annexed it to the abby of S. Mary near Leiceſter, but it was afterward reſtored to Shene, and, as parcel of its poſſeſſions, granted by K. Henry 8. to Trinity college in Cambridge.

[a] Who was the founder or founders of this houſe, I have not yet met with. It could not be founded, (as Weaver, p. 544.) by baron Wake, temp. R. Joan. for 'till after his reign there were none of this order in England. Nor was it by Margaret counteſs of Leiceſter, 18 Hen. 3. for her reſidence was in, and her benefactions to, the other priory of alien Benedictine monks (which was of the foundation of her anceſtor) for theſe Franciſcans were not capable, by the rules of their order, or the laws of the land, to hold tythes or impropriate churches; with ſubmiſſion to Sr. Hen. [a] Richard Rich mercer and ſheriff of London, A. D. 1441. is alſo ſaid to have founded a certain almſhouſe at this place. Dugd. Baron. ii. 387.

[b] If the S. Neot from whom this place hath its name was, as Malmſbury, De geſtis pontif. lib. iv. ſaith, a ſcholar of Erconwald biſhop of London, he muſt be different from, and have lived near an hundred years before that learned S. Neot who flouriſhed in K. Alfred's time. However neither of them could have been ſo late as the year 991. according to Mon. Angl. i. 369. becauſe this monaſtery of his name had been ſome time before in being, as appears not only from the Ely book, but alſo from the hiſtory of Rameſey, edit. Gale, cap. lvii. p. 423.

[c] So the Monaſt. vol. i. p. 368. But one earl Alric is ſaid to have been the original founder in Leland. Collect. i. 71. and Collect. iii. 13. this monaſtery is ſaid to have been the palace of one earl Elfrid. The verſes on the wall in St. Neot's church in Cornwall aſcribe this foundation to earl Alfric: And amongſt the particulars of the valuation of St. Neot's priory in the Firſt Fruits office there is, " S. Neot. eleemoſin. ad orandum pro ani-" mabus Aylrici comitis primi fundatoris et Elfledae " uxoris ejus."

[a] The Ramſey abby of nuns ſaid to have been founded by K. Edwy, and reſtored by K. Edgar in Leland. Collect. i. 325. belongs to Rumſey or Romſey in Hantſhire.

[b] This is the date according to Ramſey books, which hath ſeveral circumſtances to ſupport it rather than A. D. 986. according to the Worceſter annals, (Angl. Sacr.) tho' this laſt agrees better with the bringing monks hither from Weſtbyri, if Weſtbury was not filled with monks before 983. as in the ſame annals. Weſtmonaſt. ſaith, Ramſey was founded A. D. 968. Bollandus corrects Sim. Dunelmenſis for ſaying, that Ramſey was conſecrated Id. Nov. 991. and in Vita S. Oſwaldi apud Acta Sanctorum, Feb. 28 vel 29. ſaith, Ramſey was five years in building, and dedicated 6 Id. Nov. A. D. 974.

CANTERBURY.

King Ethelbert, upon his firſt converſion to Chriſtianity, about the year 600. gave his palace here to St. Auguſtine, and the monks that came over with him, who thereupon began a monaſtery here, and repairing an old church in the neighbourhood (ſaid to have been founded and filled with monks [e] before the Romans [f] left this iſland) dedicated it to the honor of our bleſſed ſavior Chriſt. This was by the archbiſhops made their cathedral, and for the moſt part was under the care of a dean and Secular canons, till archbiſhop Ealfric, A. D. 1003. turn'd them out, and put in monks in their ſtead; but the Seculars quickly after ſeem to have repoſſeſſed themſelves, and continued till Lanfranc, about A. D. 1080. rebuilt the cathedral and the adjacent buildings, and repleniſhed the ſame with one hundred and fifty Benedictine monks. From this time this monaſtery was often ſtyled the church or priory of the Holy Trinity, as well as Chriſt Church, and beſide the great offerings at Thomas of Becket's ſhrine, was endowed with lands and revenues, valued, 26 Hen. 8. at the clear ſum of 2387 l. 13 s. 3 d. ob. per ann [g]. or 2489 l. 4 s. 9 d. as in Speed [h]. Upon the diſſolution K. Henry 8. refounded this church, and placed therein a dean and twelve canons or prebendaries, with ſix preachers, ſix Minor canons, ſix ſubſtitutes, twelve lay clerks, ten choriſters, two maſters and fifty ſcholars, twelve almſmen, etc.

CANTERBURY.

The before mentioned new convert Ethelbert king of Kent, upon the farther perſuaſions of his ghoſtly father St. Auguſtine, founded, A. D. 605. another noble monaſtery here, and commended it to the patronage of St. Peter and St. Paul; but the names of thoſe two great apoſtles were ſwallowed up by the new one of St. Auguſtine, archbiſhop of Canterbury; for, after his burial here, this houſe was generally ſtyled St. Auguſtine's abby. The monks were of the Benedictine order, and, 26 Hen. 8. were returned into the exchequer to have been endowed with 1413 l. 4 s. 11 d. ob. q. per ann. Dugd. 1412 l. 4 s. 7 d. ob. q. Speed; which laſt ſum is the groſs value in the mſ [b]. and the clear ſum there is 1274 l. 0 s. 10 d. ob. q [b]. The ſite was granted for life to cardinal Poole 2 and 3. Phil. et Mar.

FOLKSTONE, olim Folcanſtan[a].

EANSWITHA [b] daughter to Eadbald king of Kent, chooſing a religious life, her father, about A. D. 630. built here, for the uſe of her and her companions, a church and nunnery dedicated to St. Peter, which, in proceſs of time was, as Capgrave ſaith [c], ſwallowed up by the ſea, but, as others have it [d], was deſtroyed by the Danes, and after that granted by K. Ethelſtan, A. D. 927. to Chriſt Church Canterbury. After the Conqueſt Nigell de Munewell [e] was lord of Folkſton, and about A. D. 1095. gave the church of St. Mary and St. Eanſwide here to the abbat and convent of Lonley in Normandy, whereupon ſome Benedictine monks from thence were placed here firſt in the caſtle, and afterward in a building nearer the church. This alien priory had the fate of all other ſuch like houſes, to be ſeiſed, during the wars with France, into the king's hands [f], but was afterwards made denizon, and continued till the diſſolution, when it was valued at 41 l. 15 s. 10 d. per ann. Dugd. 63 l. 0 s. 7 d. Speed. The ſite was granted, 30 Hen. 8. to Edward lord Clinton.

LIMING[g].

ETHELBURGA daughter of K. Ethelbert, after the death of her huſband Edwin K. of Northumberland, A. D. 633. return'd into Kent, and, by the favor of her brother K. Eadbald, built a monaſtery here to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary. This Religious houſe might perhaps conſiſt of nuns at firſt, but afterward it came under the government of an abbat [h], and continued till after A. D. 964. But ſuffering very much by the Danes, it came at length into the hands of the archbiſhop or church of Canterbury.

Egbert king of Kent gave, A. D. 669[c]. to one Baſſe, formerly one of his noblemen, now a prieſt, ſome lands here, whereupon he built a monaſtery which was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary. It was, A. D. 949. annexed to Chriſt Church in Canterbury by the grant of K. Eadred, when probably the abbat and Black monks were removed; yet it ſeems to have been a church of more than ordinary note, under the government of a dean many years after, viz. about A. D. 1030.

About the year 670[e]. K. Egbert beſtowed upon his niece Domneva ſeveral plowlands in this iſland in order to found and endow a monaſtery, which ſhe did, to the honor of the Virgin Mary, and placed her daughter St. Mildred abbeſs here over ſeventy nuns. This abby was plundered and burnt, and the nuns and clerks in it murder'd by the Danes ſeveral times, but chiefly in the years 980. and 1011. After the laſt of which times here were no more nuns, but a few Secular prieſts only, and their church and lands were granted by K. Canute, A. D. 1027. to the monks of St. Auſtin's Canterbury, who tranſlated the body of St. Mildred alſo to their own church.

Cressy, out of Harpsfield, makes K. Egbert, who died A. D. 673. to have built here, for his ſiſter Ermenburga, a monaſtery dedicated to St. Ethelbert and St. Ethelbright, which ſeems to have been a miſtake of the ſtory of St. Ethelbert and St. Ethelred, brothers of Domneva here murdered, and for the expiation of which crime the abby of Minſtre was founded.

The Religious ſuffered much here upon the Daniſh invaſions, by whom at laſt their houſe was wholly deſtroyed. But it was re-edified and repleniſhed with Benedictine nuns by William archbiſhop of Canterbury, A. D. 1130. and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Sexburgh. In theſe early Saxon times it is ſaid, that within the walls, on the ſouth part of this city, was a monaſtery built in honor of St. Mildred, whoſe laſt abbat's name was Alfwic[b]; of which neither Mr. Somner nor Mr. Battely give us any account.

DOVER.

Before A. D. 640. K. Eadbald built a chapel within the caſtle here, and therein placed a college of twenty four Secular canons, who were removed down into the town to the old church of St. Martin near the market by Wictred king of Kent about the year 696[c]. where they continued above four hundred years[d], till, in the time of K. Henry 1. complaints being made of ſome irregularities, he gave their houſe with all their lands and revenues to William Corboil archbiſhop of Canterbury, who, A. D. 1131. began the foundation of a new church with intent to ſettle in the ſame a convent of Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin from Merton in Surry: But his ſucceſſor archbiſhop Theobald, A. D. 1140. brought in a prior and twelve Benedictine monks, who were ſubordinate to the monaſtery of Chriſt Church in Canterbury; altho' their poſſeſſions were valued diſtinct, 26 Hen. 8. [a] As is plain from his charter in the Monaſticon; but in Leland. Collect. vol. 3. p. 73. the year of this foundation is fixed at A. D. 1106. Philpot makes it A. D. 1090. perhaps begun in this latter, and finiſhed in the other.

CANTERBURY.

The hoſpital of Eaſtbridge or Kingſbridge in this city is gueſs'd to have been of archbiſhop Lanfranc's foundation[a]. However, if the confirmation of what Robert Drus gave to the church of Eaſtburch, and the Regular brethren there mention'd by Mr. Speed belong to this place, it was as ancient as K. Henry 1. and ſo before Tho. Becket's time, who is by ſome ſaid to be the founder[b]; but whoever founded it, it was called immediately after the canonization of the laſt mentioned archbiſhop, the Hoſpital of St. Thomas the Martyr. Archbiſhop Stratford did ſo much for it, as to be ſtyled the ſecond founder. It was originally for the entertainment of pilgrims, and the revenues of it, 26 Hen. 8. were 23 l. 18 s. 9 d. ob. q. per ann[c]. Dugd. Speed. It was preſerved upon the reformation, but being like to be ſwallow'd up in Q. Elizabeth's time, archbiſhop Whitgift recovered the ſame, and made ſtatutes, which are confirm'd by act of parliament, whereby here are eſtabliſh'd a maſter, a ſchoolmaſter, five in-brothers and five in-ſiſters, and as many out-brothers and out-ſiſters.

LILLE CHERCH or Heyham [d].

A NUNNERY of the Benedictine order, dedicated to the bleſſed virgin Mary, and founded before the year 1151. by K. Stephen, whoſe daughter the princeſs Mary (who afterward became abbeſs of Rumſey) was at firſt a nun here. This houſe had at firſt ſome dependance on the abby of St. Sulſpice in Bourges [e]. Here were ſome time ſixteen nuns, but, 13 Hen. 8. they being reduced to three, and thoſe ſcandalous, this priory was ſuppreſſed by Dr. Fiſher biſhop of Rocheſter, and the next year given by the king to St. John's college in Cambridge.

NEWINGTON.

THERE is in W. Thorn's chronicle of St. Auſtin's Canterbury, col. 1931. a traditionary account of an old nunnery in this town, and that, upon occaſion of the prioreſs's being ſtrangled in her bed, the nuns were removed to Shepey; that after this K. Henry 2. out of their eſtate founded here a college of ſeven Secular canons, but one of them being murdered, four of the brethren were found guilty, upon which the two innocent canons convey'd their two parts to the abby of St. Auſtin's, and the other five parts were granted by the king to Richard de Lucy. It is alſo ſaid, that ſome writings aſſign this misfortune among the prebendaries to have happened temp. Will. Conq. and indeed, col. 1788. it is poſitively aſſerted that the Conqueror gave to the ſaid abby of St. Auſtin's eight prebends in Newington.

[f] Quaere, Whether this houſe was not ſituate upon the extremity of the pariſh next Ewell, and was not upon that account ſometimes called Ewell; and whether this was not the houſe of Templars near Dover, where (as Matth. Paris, p. 237. and others) king John reſigned his crown to Pandulph the pope's legate, A. D. 1213. For the pardon of archbiſhop Langton, which was one effect of that meeting, is dated at the temple of Ewell. Vide pat. 15 Joannis n. 48. "Pardonatio Stephani archiepiſcopi Cantuar. datum apud "templum de Ewell." And that the Templars had poſſeſſions, if not an houſe, at Ewell, ſee Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 527. As theſe two pariſhes are contiguous, I rather think Swingfield and Ewell to have been the ſame houſe, than two diſtinct ones; but leave it to others.

Henry 7. firſt founder of this friery, which was ſettled almoſt three hundred years before. He might be a great benefactor, tho' Somner hath not obſerved it, or might change the firſt Conventual Franciſcans into that reformed branch of their order called Obſervants or Recollects, but could not be firſt founder. Weaver, p. 234. ſaith this houſe was valued at 39 l. 12 s. 8 d. ob. per ann. But there is no valuation of it either in Dugdale or Speed.

[g] For then theſe friers came firſt into England, and Mr. Somner thinks this the firſt houſe they had in England, but moſt writers make their firſt houſe at Oxford. See the Preface.

[c] Mr. Lewis ſaith about 1245. but it is mentioned earlier in the records. The lateſt edition of Camden placeth the foundation in the twelfth century.

[d] It might have been alſo originally for leprous perſons, as Mr. Philpot, beſides thoſe others. The laſt edition of Camden ſaith it was founded for receiving Knights Templars going out and coming in to the kingdom. And ſome ſay it was a preceptory of Templars founded by Lucas de Vienna, and belonged afterwards to the Hoſpitalars. But this I have met with no account of, either in the Monaſticon or records; and I think it not reconcileable with the account of this houſe and its revenues eſcheating to the crown on the failure of its members: For then it would have gone into the general income of the order.

[a] So Weaver, p. 316. and Speed. Theſe friers were certainly brought into England this year by the lords John Veſcy and Richard Grey; and probably forthwith placed at Alnewick in Northumberland by the former, and here at Aylesford by the latter.

[b] Here the pat. 5 et 6 Phil. et Mar. p. 1. m. ult. places this houſe; and in this hamlet was the ancient family of the Alchers or Fitz Auchers ſeated; ſo that Mr. Philpot ſeems upon good grounds to have corrected the name of the founder, called by Camden and Speed Albuſer or Albuger.

[c] Speed, and Weaver, p. 290. yet Bale, who was of this order, ſaith (Cent. xii. 20. and many others from him) that this was the firſt houſe theſe friers had.

[d] This hoſpital was in being A. D. 1224. when the friers Minors came into England, according to Collect. Anglo-minorit.

[f] So the foundation charter, but Matth. Paris puts it in the year 1258. when perhaps it might be finiſhed. Bilſington is the ſame with what M. Paris calls the priory near Rumney; but Weaver making it different occaſioned a miſtake in the firſt edition of this book.

DERTFORD.

About A. D. 1355. K. Edward 3. founded and endowed a fine nunnery here under the patronage of St. Mary and St. Margaret. The prioreſs and nuns were firſt of the order of St. Auguſtine [a], then of St. Dominic [b], after that Auſtin's [c], again at the diſſolution Dominicans [d], but under the government of Black friers, and thoſe of Langley in Hertfordſhire ſeem to have had that care. Ladies of ſeveral noble families have been prioreſſes and Religious in this houſe, which was endowed, 26 Hen. 8. with 380 l. 9 s. 0 d. ob. per ann. as Dugd. or 408 l. as the mſ. Valor [e]. It was granted to Edm. Mervyn 36 Hen. 8. but 5 and 6. Phil. et Mar. it was with all its lands ſettled upon the prioreſs and convent of Langley Regis. Dorman ſaith that Q. Mary reſtored the nuns of Dertford, but I have not yet met with any record to juſtify that aſſertion.

[a] Quaere, Whether this was ever perfected by reaſon of that lord's troubles and execution the next year.

[b] This is probably the "Hoſpitale S. Bartholomaei in "Saltwood," mentioned in Sancroft's mſ. Valor, and there valued at 4 l. 6 s. per ann. in the whole; and 3 l. 12 s. 4 d. clear (13 s. 8 d. being yearly paid out of it to the archbiſhop and lord of the manor of Newynton) for Saltwood and Newington are both near Hithe, and the yearly tenth of 7 s. 2 d. paid out of the "Hoſpitale S. Bartholomaei prope Hythe," as Strype's Parker, p. 114. agrees with the clear valuation of "Hoſpitale S. B. in "Saltwood". Leland, Itin. vol. vii. p. 116. ſaith, Hythe is but a chapel to Saltwood; "and not far of was an hoſ"pital of a gentilman infected with lepre." There is alſo an account in Strype's life of archbiſhop Parker, p. 114. of an hoſpital of St. John at Hythe, founded by the jurates and commonalty of the town, and endowed with lands to the value of ſix pounds per ann. wherein there were then, A. D. 1562. kept and maintained eight beds for needy poor people, and ſuch as were maimed in the wars; but the time of this foundation is uncertain.

[c] I find no mention of this houſe but what is taken from S. Clara. Stevens's making Edmund earl of Cornwall to to be brother to K. Edward 3. (and cofounder of this friery) is certainly a miſtake. The collector of the Anglominoritica, who alſo mentions this convent in p. ii. p. 39. out of S. Clara, more truly calls the brother of K. Ed. 3. who was earl of Cornwall, John.

GREENWICH.

WEAVER tells us of a priory here of friers aliens Minorites (Dominicans according to Philpot) belonging to Gaunt, and given afterward to Shene. The manor of Greenwich did indeed belong Gaunt, tho' not by the gift of K. Edward 3. but of more ancient donation, and was part of the endowment of their cell at Lewſham, and with that was ſettled upon Shene. Mr. Speed ſaith, K. Edward 3. and Sr. John Norbury founded a houſe of Grey friers here A. D. 1376. and the obſervants that came and fixed in the chapel of the Holy Croſs here temp. Ed. 4. and were a branch of the ſame order, had an apartment built for them near the palace by K. Hen. 7[a]. Theſe laſt were reſtored by Q. Mary twenty four years after they had been ſuppreſſed by her father, but were expelled again by Q. Elizabeth[b]. Whether the former were two diſtinct houſes, as Weaver p. 339. is uncertain.

Vide Philpot's Villare, p. 163. Speed, Weaver, p. 339.

BRADGARE.

A SMALL college of one Secular prieſt, maſter, and two ſcholars or fellows, being clerks, founded in the pariſh church here to the honor of the Holy Trinity, 16 Ric. 2. at the expence of Mr. Robert [rector[c]] of Bradgare, Mr. John Burbache clerk, Thomas Jakyn clerk, John Weſt, John Trowbrege clerk, John atte Vyſe, John Lamb and Roger Webb. It was granted, 29 Hen. 8. to the archbiſhop of Canterbury in exchange[d].

SANDWICH.

AN hoſpital for twelve poor perſons, called St. Thomas's hoſpital[e], founded by Thomas Raling clerk, Will. Swan clerk, John Goddard and Richard Long[f].

WEST PECCHAM or Little Peccham.

HERE was a preceptory belonging to the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 63 l. 6 s. 8 d. per ann. as Dugd. and Speed, or 60 l. as Le Neve's mſ. and the manor, as parcel of the poſſeſſions of that order, was granted from the crown to Sr. Rob. Southwell 33 Hen. 8. It is more uncertain by whom and when it was given; Mr. Philpot [a] ſaith it was founded by John Colepepper for the Templars before their diſſolution 1 Ed. 2. and that afterward it came with the reſt of their lands to the Hoſpitalars. Mr. Speed and Weaver ſay, that the founder was the ſame with John Colepeper, who was one of the juſtices of the common pleas in the time of K. Henry 4. It might probably be a late donation, becauſe not mentioned in the account of the Templars and Hoſpitalars lands in the Monaſticon, tom. ii.

[a] Camden calls thoſe Mendicants whom K. Henry 7. built an houſe for; and ſo Leland, Collect. vol. i. p. 96. but Stow calls them Franciſcans; and Eraſmus, in his epiſtle to Jodoc. Jones, p. 579. calls them alſo Franciſcans. Reyner, ii. 166. ſpeaks of a priory of Cluniacs at Greenwich; but I know nothing more of it.

[d] Ibidem.

[e] There is no mention of this hoſpital in archbiſhop Parker's certificate of the hoſpitals in his dioceſe to the privy council, A. D. 1562. but he mentions another called Ellys's hoſpital, firſt founded by one Tho. Ellys; of the yearly value of 12 l. wherein were then maintained eight brothers, and four ſiſters; and which was in the patronage of the mayor and jurates. Strype's Life of Parker, p. 114. That return mentions alſo another hoſpital called S*t. John's houſe* of Sandwich, wherein the mayor and jurates maintained twelve poor men, tho' there were no poſſeſſions belonging to it.

SEVENOKE.

William Sennock ſurnamed from this town, where he was taken up an infant left expoſed by his unnatural parents in the ſtreets, when he afterwards became lord mayor of London, founded, A. D. 1418. an hoſpital for the relief of twenty poor men and women, and a free ſchool in this town, which was afterward more liberally endowed by Sr. John Patkyn.

But here was alſo a more ancient hoſpital dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, in the gift of the archbiſhop of Canterbury. For by pat. 23 Ed. 3. p. 2. m.: "Rex conceſſit Joanni de Tamworth "cuſtodiam hoſpitalis S. Joannis Baptiſtae de Sevenoke ratione vacat. archiepiſcopatus Can"tuar. 7 aug."

WYE.

A college [b] for a maſter or provoſt and ſeveral Secular canons was begun, A. D. 1431. by John Kemp (then archbiſhop of York after of Canterbury, and a cardinal) in this town of his nativity, on the weſt ſide of the church yard, but not finiſhed till about A. D. 1447. St. Gregory and St. Martin were the ſaints in honor of whom both the pariſh church (which formerly was appropriate to Battell abby) and college were named. The yearly revenues of this laſt were worth 93 l. 2 s. ob. per ann. and, after the ſurrender, the ſite was granted, 36 Hen. 8. to one Walter Buckler.

ASHFORD, olim Aſhetesford.

A college was intended to have been founded in the pariſh of St. Mary here by Sr. John Fogg [c], comptroller to K. Edward 4. "But K. Edward dyed ere Fogg had finiſhed this en"terpris, ſo that now remaineth to Aſhford the only name of a prebend. This place hath "lands, prieſts, and choriſters, but removable, for they have no commune ſeale.[d]" But there is mention of Dr. Sutton, maſter of the college here, as patron of Dunton in Eſſex, A. COKERSAND.

Here was firſt an hermitage, and then an hoſpital for ſeveral infirm brethren under the government of a prior, dedicated to St. Mary, and ſubordinate to the abby of Leyceſtre, founded perhaps, or howſoever chiefly endowed, by William of Lancaſtre, temp. Hen. 2[b]. but about the year 1190. it was changed into an abby of Premonſtratenſian canons[c], to which there ſeems to have been united another abby of the ſame order, which Theobald brother to Hubert Walter archbiſhop of Canterbury ſome few years after[d] built, or deſigned to build at Pyling to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin. The abby of Cokerſand conſiſted, about the time of the diſſolution of twenty two Religious and fifty ſeven ſervants[e], and was then found to be worth 157 l. 14 s. 0 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 228 l. 5 s. 4 d. ob. Speed. 282 l. 7 s. 7 d. ob. according to a ſecond valuation[f]. PRESTON in Acmunderneſs.

The original builder of the Grey friers college on the north weſt ſide of this town was Edmund[b] earl of Lancaſter, ſon to K. Henry 3[c]. The ſite of which was granted, 32 Hen. 8. to Tho. Holcroft.

PRESTON.

An ancient hoſpital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen occurs in the Lincoln Taxation, A. D. 1291. The maſterſhip was in the gift of the king.

Vide pat. 15 Ed. 2. p. 2. m. 10.

HOLAND.

Here was, in the chapel of St. Thomas the martyr, a college or chantry, conſiſting of a dean and twelve Secular prieſts, who were changed, A. D. 1319. by Walter lord biſhop of Litchfield, at the petition of Sr. Robert Holand then patron, and, as I conceive, original founder, into a prior and Benedictine monks. Here were, about the time of the ſuppreſſion, five Religious, and twenty ſix ſervants. This houſe was valued at 53 l. 3 s. 4 d. per ann. Dugd. 61 l. 3 s. 4 d. Speed, and at 78 l. 12 s. 0 d. according to a ſecond valuation. It was granted, 37 Hen. 8. to John Holcroſt.

WARRINGTON.

At the bridge end, near this town, was a priory of Auguſtine friers [a], founded before A. D. 1379 [b]. which, 32 Hen. 8. was granted to the often mentioned Tho. Holcroft.

MANCHESTER.

Tho. de la Ware clerk, ſometime rector of the pariſh church here, (having the barony and eſtate of his family by the death of his brother John lord de la Ware without heirs) obtained leave of the king, 9 Hen. 5. to make it collegiate, to conſiſt of a warden and a certain number of prieſts [c]. It was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, and endowed with revenues to the yearly value of 200 l [d]. or, as they were returned into the Firſt Fruits office, 26 Hen. 8. 226 l. 12 s. 5 d. in the whole, and 213 l. 10 s. 11 d. clear. It was refounded by Q. Elizabeth, 18 Julii anno regni 19. for a warden and four fellows.

William 1. deſtroyed together with the city and caſtle, but was re-edified A. D. 1107. by Robert earl of Mellent and Leiceſter, for a dean and twelve prebendaries, and dedicated, as the old church was, to St. Mary. The greateſt part of the lands and tithes belonging to this college was, by Robert Boſſu earl of Leiceſter, alienated and annexed to his new abby of St. Mary de Pratis. However here [b] continued a maſter and ſeven fellows [c], or rather a dean and ſeven prebendaries [d], whoſe houſe was called the college of St. Mary the Leſs [e], and whoſe revenues were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 24 l. 13 s. 11 d [f]. per ann. in the whole, and at 23 l. 12 s. 11 d. clear.

[a] Rather than by his father Rob. Boſſu, as Dugd. Baron. vol. i. p. 86. becauſe Blanchmains, by his marriage with the heireſs of Hugh Grentmeiſnel ſeems to have been the firſt earl of Leiceſter that had any thing to do with the honor of Hinkley. The old matricula in Burton ſaith that the monks of Lira had this church by the gift of Will. fil. Oſberti, who lived *temp. Will. [b] Both this houſe and that of the Preaching friers, were in being before A. D. 1252. For, in Mr. Le Neve's Regiſter relating to the church of Litchfield, there is a delegation to the guardians of the friers Preachers and Minors at Leiceſter, to hear and determine a difference about tithes (I think at Bankwell in Derbyſhire) between the dean and chapter of Litchfield, and the prior and convent of Lenton in Northamptonſhire, from pope Innocent 4. anno Pont. 10. and the guardian of the friers Minors finiſhed the ſame, die ſabb. poſt purificat. LEICESTER.

On four acres of ground near the caſtle Henry earl of Leiceſter and Lancaſter, A. D. 1330. began to build an hoſpital to the honor of the annunciation of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, for a maſter and certain chaplains and poor perſons, which was ſo much augmented by his ſon Henry duke of Lancaſter, that about the year 1355. it was turned into a noble college, called the Newark or Collegium Novi Operis, or St. Mary's the Greater; and it was finiſhed or farther improved both in buildings and endowments by the famous John of Gaunt (ſon of the laſt mentioned Henry) duke alſo of Lancaſter, and his executors. The whole foundation conſiſted of a dean, twelve [a] Secular canons or prebendaries, twelve vicars, three clerks, ſix choriſters, fifty poor men, and fifty poor women, ten nurſes, with proper officers and attendants, all plentifully provided for, and the houſe was much favoured by K. Henry 4. and his ſucceſſors of the Lancaſtrian line. Its poſſeſſions were rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 800 l. per ann. as Leland. Collect. i. p. 74. at 888 l. 7 s. 2 d. as Sancroft's mſ. Valor, (which was the ſum total) and at 595 l. 7 s. 4 d. as Dugd. which was the clear ſum. Some part of it was granted, 2 Ed. 6. to John Beaumont and William Guyſe.

LEICESTER.

A new bede houſe or hoſpital for a maſter, confrater, and twenty four poor people, viz. twelve men and twelve women was founded here by William Wigſton merchant of the ſtaple, in the latter part of the reign of K. Henry 6. as one [a], in the reign of K. Henry 7. as another [b], about A. D. 1520. as another [c]. It was dedicated to St. Urſula; and the poſſeſſions of it were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at no more than 8 l. [d] per ann. But having the good fortune to eſcape the general diſſolution of hoſpitals, temp. Ed. 6. there are now twenty four poor people in it, who have each 2 s. 10 d. per week. The confrater hath about 70 l. per ann. and the maſter about 160 l. The maſter and confrater are put in by the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaſter, and the poor people by the maſter.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

ICANHOC or Ycanno[a].

ST. BOTOLPH built a monaſtery here, A. D. 654[b]. upon a deſert piece of ground ſaid to have been given him for that purpoſe by Ethelmund king of the South Angles[c], which continued till that devaſtation of theſe countries by the Danes, A. D. 870. ſo fatal to theſe old Religious houſes.

PEARTAN or Peartenei.

A MONASTERY of this name, in the kingdom of the Mercians, under the government of an abbat, is more than once mentioned by Bede[d], in the ſeventh century[e], and is thought to have been at Partney[f] in this county, where, as old as the time of K. Henry I. there certainly was an hoſpital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene[g]. The ſame venerable hiſtorian[h] alſo tells us, that in theſe ancient times there was another monaſtery near this, over which preſided the abbeſs Edelhild.

BARROWE, olim At Barwe.

WULPHER king of the Mercians gave to that pious man Cead or Chad, about the middle of the ſeventh century, the land of fifty families, as Bede tells us, to build a monaſtery at a place called, At Barwe, that is, at the Wood, in the province of Lindſey; ſome appearance of which, Bede ſaith, remained in his time.

Vide Bede's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, book iv. chap. 3.

BARDNEY, olim Beardanam[i].

HERE was a noble monaſtery before the year 697[k]. to which Ethelred king of Mercia was a great benefactor, if not the original founder, who upon his reſignation of the crown retired hither, and became firſt monk, and after abbat of this houſe till his death. It is ſaid to have had three hundred monks[l], but was deſtroy'd by the Danes A. D. 870. and continued in ruins above two hundred years, till Remigius biſhop of Lincoln[m], or rather Giſlebert de Gaunt[n], temp. Will. Conq. re-edified the church and buildings, and repleniſhed the ſame with Benedictine monks to the honor of St. Peter, and St. Paul, and St. Oſwald the king and martyr, whoſe relicks were firſt enſhrined here, but A. D. 909. tranſlated to Gloceſter. The revenues of this abby were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 366 l. 6 s. 1 d. per ann. as Dugd. 429 l. 7 s. as Speed. 432 l. as Leland, Collect. i. 92. After the diſſolution the ſite came into the hands of Sr. Robert Tirwhit.

[a] Corruptly called Wenno, Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 88. a. This place is thought by many to be at, or near Botolph's Town or Boſton in this county, which probably had its name from this ſaint. But it hath not yet appeared to me in any ancient hiſtorian, that here was his monaſtery and place of burial. R. Higden Polychr. edit Gale, p. 236. placeth it "ad orientem Lincolniae;" which, if ſome diſtance of miles be allowed, is reconcileable to Boſton. But Leland, Itin. vol. 26. and Collect. iii. p. 33. takes a place "in the eaſt ſuburb of Lincoln city, ſcant half a mile from "the minſter, to be Icanno, where was a houſe of monks "in Botolph's time, ſpoken of by Bede." Quaere, Where. And there ſeems to be ſome reſemblance of the name in Wickanford, upon which part of the city of Lincoln was rebuilt by the Saxons. See Camden.

STOWE[b], Marieſtow[c], i. e. S. Mariae Locus[d].

HERE was a church or minſter for Secular prieſts built to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin Mary by Eadnoth biſhop of Dorcheſter[e], and much augmented by the benefactions of earl Leofric and his lady Godiva[f]. After the conqueſt, the Religious here were changed into Benedictine monks, under the government of an abbat, by biſhop Remigius[g], who got for them, of William Rufus, the then deſolate abby of Eynſham in Oxfordſhire, whither his ſucceſſor Robert Bloet removed this abbat and his monks, reſerving Stow, Newark, and ſome other eſtates to the ſee of Lincoln, for which he gave them in exchange Charlebury, etc.

SPALDING.

Thorold de Bukenhale brother to the above-mentioned charitable counteſs Godiva gave a place here, A. D. 1052. for the habitation, and lands for the maintenance, of a prior and five monks from Croiland, who were forced to abandon this cell after the Conqueſt, by reaſon of the barbarous uſage they met with from Yvo Tailboys earl of Angiers, then lord of this town, and great part of the adjacent country. The ſaid Yvo, about the year 1074. gave the church of St. Mary and the manor here to the abby of St. Nicholas at Angiers, from whence were ſent over ſome Benedictine monks, and ſo it became an alien priory to that foreign monaſtery, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas. It was given, 20 Hen. 6. to King's college in Cambridge, and 1 Ed. 4. to Sion abby; but being made "prioratus indigena," and even at laſt an abby, it continued till the general ſuppreſſion, when its yearly income was rated at 767 l. 8 s. 11 d. Dugd. 878 l. 18 s. 3 d. Speed. The ſite was granted, 3 Ed. 6. to Sr. John Cheke.

COVENHAM.

Some lands here being given, about A. D. 1082. to the abby of St. Karileſus in the dioceſe of Mains by K. William the Conqueror, at the inſtance of William biſhop of Durham[a], here were ſettled a prior and Benedictine monks from that foreign monaſtery, to which it continued a cell under the patronage of the biſhops of Durham till it was made over, 31 Ed. 1. to the abbat and convent of Kirkſtede, in whom it continued till the diſſolution; after which, as parcel of that monaſtery, it was granted to William Skipwith.

LINCOLN.

"Where the dean of Lincoln's houſe is, in the mynſter cloſe of Lincoln and thereabout, was "a monaſtery of nuns afore the time that Remigius began the new minſter[b]."

When, by the conſtitutions of the provincial ſynods in the year 1070, -75 and -78. the epiſcopal ſees were decreed to be removed into great towns and cities, Remigius then biſhop of Dorcheſter fixed upon this place, and, in the Conqueror's time, bought the ground for the cathedral church, biſhop's palace, and houſes for the dignitaries and officers belonging to the ſame, and began the buildings[c], which were not finiſhed till ſome years after by his ſucceſſor Robert Bloet, who doubled the number of the prebends, making them in all forty two. Remigius died four days before the conſecration of the cathedral, A. D. 1092, which was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin Mary[d]. The revenues of this biſhopric were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 2095 l. 12 s. 5 d. in the whole, and at 1962 l. 17 s. 4 d. ob. clear[e]; and the common revenues of the chapter, excluſive of the ſeparate corpſes, at 575 l. 8 s. 2 d. But a great many of the old manors and eſtates being granted from the biſhopric (chiefly temp. Ed. 6.) it is now rated only at 830 l. 18 s. 1 d. ob[f]. and the dividend money of the chapter (from which little or nothing ſeems to have been taken) at 546 l. 2 s. 6 d[g]. There now belong to this noble cathedral, beſides the biſhop, a dean, precentor, chancellor, ſubdean, ſix archdeacons[h], fifty two prebendaries, four prieſt vicars, eight lay vicars or ſingingmen, an organiſt, ſeven poor clerks, eight choriſters, ſeven Burghurſt chanters, etc.

HAVERHOLM.

THIS place was firſt given by Alexander biſhop of Lincoln to the Ciſtertian monks of Fountains in Yorkſhire[b], about A. D. 1137. that they might build an abby of that order, but, after having made ſome progreſs in the ſame, they pretended not to like the ſituation, and thereupon removed to Louth park. The good biſhop quickly diſpoſed of the iſland here to the nuns and canons of the new and ſtrict order of St. Gilbert of Sempringham, who ſettled there A. D. 1139. and continued till the general diſſolution, when their income was rated at 70 l. 15 s. 10 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 88 l. 5 s. 5 d. Speed. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. THE counteſs Lucy relict of Yvo de Tailbois, Roger de Romara, and Ranulf the firſt earl of Cheſter, built here, temp. R. Steph. a monaſtery of Ciſtertian[g] nuns under the direction of a maſter[h]. It was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, and had in it thirteen nuns, whoſe poſſeſſions were rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 114 l. 5 s. 2 d. ob. per ann. Dugd. 163 l. 1 s. 2 d. ob. Speed. It being one of the leſſer monaſteries came to the crown by the act 27 Hen. 8. but that king was pleaſed, anno regni 29. to refound the ſame for a prioreſs and nuns of the Premonſtratenſian order, which continued only two years, till the diſſolution of the greater abbies, and was granted, 32 Hen. 8. to Robert Dighton.

[e] Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 587. Reyner, vol. i p. 161. In Dugd. Bar. vol. i. p. 573. it is ſaid to have been founded in the latter end of the reign of K. Henry 1.

[f] Not St. Michael, as mſ. Aſhmol. p. 220.

[g] Thus the charter of Hen. 3. Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 924. and Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 92. but the Monaſticon, vol. i. p. 486. placeth it among the Benedictine monaſteries; and ibid. vol. i. p. 1041. and vol. ii. p. 809. amongſt the Gilbertine; and ſo doth Mr. Speed. The laſt foundation was undoubtedly Premonſtatenſian; which makes it probable that the old monaſtery was ſo too. But it is neither to be found in the protections of that order, 22 Ed. 1. nor in the viſitations of biſhop Redman. Mſ. Aſhmol. 1519. In the old catalogue aſcribed to Gervaſe of Canterbury or Hen. Sulgrave here are placed canons and nuns as at Sempringham, Haverholm, and other Gilbertine monaſteries; but it not being mentioned among the houſes of that order, either in Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 788. or any of the bulls and confirmation of the Sempringham houſes, there ſeems to be moſt grounds to make it Ciſtertian.

[h] For ſo in the records, "Magiſter et moniales de "Stikeſwold;" or, "Magiſter monialium de Stikeſ-"wold;" but according to Mr. Willis's Hiſtory of Abbies, vol. ii. p. 117. here were more men beſides the maſter or prior.

[b] The manor belonged to the Hoſpitalars, according to clauſ. 18 Ed. 3. p. 1. m. 6. And Dodſworth, vol. lxxxix. f. 76. from the hundred rolls, ſaith the Templars had, in the third year of K. Edward 1. thirty one ox-gangs in this town of the gift of Walter de Scrop, forty two years before.

[c] This is placed among the Benedictine monaſteries, Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 545. but among the Premonſtratenſian, Mon. Angl. vol. i. p. 1042. the laſt is moſt probable; becauſe it ſeems to have had ſome dependance upon Newhouſe (which was unqueſtionably Premonſtratenſian) the ſeal of the abbat of Newhouſe being put in behalf of theſe nuns to a convention they made with the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Regiſtr. eccl. Linc. mſ. penes reverendiſſ. Gul. Wake nuper archiepiſc. Cantuar. f. 149. [But the mſ. in Bennet college library at Cambridge, wherein the number of the Religious is put down, ſaith expreſly they were Premonſtratenſian nuns, which being only a reformation of St. Auſtin's rule, it is eaſy to account for this houſe being ſaid to be "Ordinis S. [a] Mſ. Aſhmol. n. 1519. And "Canonici de Neuboth" occur 2 Joan. in Madox's Hiſtory of the Exchequer. This abby is not to be met with in Speed's Maps; but according to the records it ſhould be near Grantham.

[b] So in the margin of Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 612.

[c] This houſe was firſt founded at Karledale or Careldale, according to Dodſworth's extracts out of the Lincoln regiſters, vol. lxxxix. f. 140. The Monaſticon ſpeaks of its being firſt at Kedington; and amongſt the charters relating to this houſe in Dodſworth, vol. lxxv. one is "Berengarii falconarii ſanctimonialibus abbatiae de "Halington."

[d] By a charter of Robert fil. Gilberti de Thadwell, to the nuns of Karledale, directed to Robert biſhop of Lincoln, and teſted by Alelm dean, Humphry ſubdean, and Hamo chancellor of Lincoln, this houſe muſt have been in being about this time. This deed is in Dodſworth, vol. lxxv. f. 23. where, and in the following pages are ſeven or eight charters belonging to this houſe not printed in the Monaſticon.

[e] So the Monaſticon expreſly, vol. i. p. 924. and the protections, pat. 22 Ed. 1. m. 8. THE abbat Mellitus was, A. D. 604. conſecrated biſhop for the kingdom of the Eaſt Saxons by St. Auſtin archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the epiſcopal ſee was fixed at London in a church [b] founded by Ethelbert king of Kent, to the honor of St. Paul on or near the place where ſtood the temple of Diana (as ſome conjecture) or a Capitol, as biſhop Stillingfleet. This church was much improved in its buildings and revenues by Erkenwald [c] the fourth biſhop, and rebuilt in the time of biſhop Ealfſtan the third, about A. D. 961. which being burnt down, Maurice biſhop of London, temp. Will. Ruſi, began that magnificent old fabric, which ſtood till the dreadful fire in the year 1666. and then with the greateſt part of the city was reduced to aſhes. But A. D. 1675. was begun, and, by the bleſſing of God, and the piety and munificence of the government hath been ſince finiſhed, the moſt regular, ſtately, large, and coſtly pile of building that has been erected to the ſervice of God in any part of Chriſtendom ſince the reformation. This cathedral hath at preſent belonging to it a biſhop, a dean, a precentor, chancellor, treaſurer, five archdeacons, thirty prebendaries, twelve petty canons, (of whom one is ſubdean, two are ſtyled cardinals, one is goſpeller, and another epiſtler) ſix vicars choral, ten ſinging men (five in orders and five laymen) ten choriſters, an organiſt, etc. The revenues of the biſhopric were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 1207 l. 16 s. 9 d. per ann. in the whole, and at 1119 l. 8 s. 1 d. [d] clear; and, beſides the diſtinct and ſeparate revenues of the dean and other members of the chapter, their common revenues were then valued at 1485 l. 0 s. 9 d. per ann. q. in the whole, and at 725 l. 7 s. 10 d. q. clear [e].

[b] I have taken no notice of the old Britiſh archbiſhops of London, as being of uncertain authority, and the place of their metropolitan church unknown. But ſuch as deſire it, may find an account of them in Spelman's Councils, vol i. p. 23, etc. Wilkins's Councils, vol. iv. 699.

[c] The legend of this biſhop's burial expreſly calls the then poſſeſſors of this church canons. Mon. Angl. vol. iii. p. 300. Leland, Collect iii. 85. ſaith, that here were monks in the time of Sebba king of the Eaſt Saxons. But this ſeems ſcarce probable, becauſe we hear no more of them; for they would not have been thrown out without much ſtruggling, and would probably have been reſtored by king Edgar and biſhop Ethelwold, if they had ever had footing in this cathedral. Nor is it of much weight, that in the charters of the Saxon kings, and the bull of pope Agatho printed by Dugdale (if all, or any of them, be genuine) and in the Saxon chronicle, anno 1087. it is called Monaſterium; for in the writings of thoſe times, that often ſignifies no more than a Minſter or Church.

[d] Now valued at M l. per ann. only in Ecton, on account of the alienations ſince made from it.

WESTMINSTER, olim Thorneie.

A MINSTER or church, dedicated to St. Peter, was built here (on the ruins of an old temple of Apollo, as 'tis ſaid, which had been alſo a Chriſtian church in K. Lucius's time) by Sebert king of the Eaſt Saxons, about A. D. 610. upon the encouragement of his mother, brother, and ſovereign K. Ethelbert, and of Mellitus biſhop of London. This being deſtroyed in the Daniſh wars, was reſtored by K. Edgar and Dunſtan then biſhop of London in the year 958[a], when twelve[b] monks were placed in it, who were but meanly provided for, till K. Edward the Confeſſor began, A. D. 1049[c] to rebuild this church and abby, which he finiſhed and royally endowed before A. D. 1066. from whence it continued in the hands of monks of the order of St. Benedict till the general diſſolution, when its poſſeſſions were valued at 3033 l. 17 s. 0 d. q.[d] per ann. mſ. Val. 3471 l.[e] 0 s. 2 d. q. Dugd. 3977 l. 6 s. 4 d. ob. q. Speed. K. Henry 8. anno reg. 32. erected here a biſhop's ſee (to whoſe dioceſe was aſſigned the county of Middleſex) and a cathedral conſiſting of a dean and twelve prebendaries. The biſhopric was ſunk in the year 1550. but the chapter continued ſix years after, when they were forced to give place to the abbat and Black monks, who were re-eſtabliſhed here by K. Philip and Q. Mary. In 1560. it was again changed into, and yet is, a collegiate church, conſiſting of a dean and twelve Secular prebendaries, to which alſo belong petty canons and other members of the choir to the number of thirty; two ſchool maſters, forty king's ſcholars, twelve almſmen, and many officers and ſervants.

ST. MARTIN LE GRAND within Alderſgate.

THOUGH there is no great ſtreſs to be laid upon thoſe authorities which aſcribe the foundation of this college to king Cadwallein [a], or ſome ancient Britains [b] in memory of that king, about A. D. 677. yet there is good reaſon to ſay, it was founded ſhortly after, viz. about A. D. 700. by Victred or Wythred [c] king of Kent; but rebuilt and chiefly endowed by two Saxon noblemen, Ingelricus and Edward or Girard his brother [d] about A. D. 1056. It was confirmed by king William the Conqueror A. D. 1068. and the collegiate church, being a royal free chapel, had ſeveral great privileges conferred upon it and the adjoining precinct by him and many of his ſucceſſors, ſuch as ſanctuary, exemption from eccleſiaſtical and civil [e] juriſdiction, etc. Here were a dean and ſeveral [f] Secular canons, till the church and all the lands belonging to it were given by K. Henry 7. to the abbat and convent of Weſtminſter A. D. 1502. and, as parcel of that monaſtery, it was granted, 34 Hen. 8. to the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter, as part of their endowment, as it ſtill continues.

ST. JAMES's HOSPITAL.

AT a diſtance from the city, in the fields near Weſtminſter, ſome well diſpoſed citizens of London, beyond the memory of man, and (as ſome think) long before the conqueſt [a], founded an hoſpital for the reception and maintenance of fourteen [b] leprous women, to whom were afterwards added eight brethren to miniſter divine ſervice [c]. This houſe was dedicated to St. James, and rebuilt in the time of K. Henry 3 [d]. It was under the government of a maſter (tho' the abbat of Weſtminſter claim'd a juriſdiction over it [e]) till K. Henry 6. granted the perpetual cuſtody of it to Eton college, who ſurrender'd it to K. Henry 8. anno regni 23. (when it was valued at 100 l. per ann.) in exchange for Chattiſham, etc. in Suffolk. On or near the place where this hoſpital ſtood, hath been ſince built the preſent royal palace of St. James.

ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM, or St. Jones's.

In the north ſuburbs of the city of London, near Weſt Smithfield, the abovementioned Jordan Briſet, by ſome called a knight, by others a baron, erected A. D. 1100. or ſome few years after an houſe or hoſpital for a new Religious order, then famous in Chriſtendom, viz. the Knights Hoſpitalars of St. John of Jeruſalem, who, by the liberality of the kings and nobility of England, and the acceſſion which was made to them upon the ſuppreſſion of the Templars, temp. Edw. 2. were endowed at the ſuppreſſion with lands to the yearly value of 3040 marks, according to Mr. Leland. 2385 l. 12 s. 8 d [d]. Dugd. and Speed. 3385 l. 19 s. 8 d. Stow. The lord prior here had precedence of all the lay barons in parliament, and chief power over all the preceptories and leſſer houſes of this order throughout England. The ſite of this priory was granted, 38 Hen. 8. to John viſcount Liſle; and great part of the church, with the fine bell tower, was blown up 3 Ed. 6. But K. Philip and Q. Mary, 4 et 5 regni, re-eſtabliſhed a lord

[a] 'Tis ſaid, Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 505. this nunnery was founded before the houſe of St. John of Jeruſalem; yet in the firſt charter, which occurs, of the grant of Jordan Briſet to Robert his chaplain, is mention of the hoſpital, and of the Hoſpitalars of Jeruſalem, as already fixed in the neighbourhood, which ſeems as irreconcileable as the death of this Jordan in A. D. 1110. Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 505. and a charter of his directed to Robert biſhop of London, Ralph dean, etc. (Mon. Angl. tom. i. p. 428.) which muſt be after the year 1140. N. B. The houſe of the Knights Hoſpitalars of St. John of Jeruſalem was ſometimes called the Hoſpital of Clerkenwell. Madox. Hiſt. Exch. p. 424.

The HOLY TRINITY or Chriſt Church within Aldgate.

On the place where one Syred had formerly begun to build a church in honor of the Holy Croſs and St. Mary Magdalene, Q. Maud [a], by the perſuaſions of archbiſhop Anſelm and Richard Beaumeis [b] biſhop of London founded, A. D. 1108. a monaſtery for canons Regular [c] of the order of St. Auſtin, then newly brought into England. This houſe was dedicated to the Holy Trinity [d], and the prior of it was alderman of London, viz. of Portſoken ward. It was rich [e], and ſurpaſſed (as Stow) all the priories in London and Middleſex; but it being ſurrendered 23 Hen. 8. the valuation is not recorded. This is ſaid to be the firſt [f] church and monaſtery, which was granted to a layman and his heirs, viz. to Sr. Thomas Audley, who had been lately ſpeaker of the houſe of Commons, and was then, 25 Hen. 8. lord chancellor of England.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW's HOSPITAL or Little St. Bartholomew's.

RAHERUS, a remarkable perſon in the court of K. Henry 1. for making jeſts and mirth, being grown ſerious, obtained of that king the grant of a void ſpace of ground in the weſt ſuburbs of London called Smithfield; and on the ſouth ſide thereof he built an hoſpital [a] for a maſter, brethren and ſiſters, and for the entertainment of poor diſeaſed perſons till they got well, of diſtreſſed women big with child, till they were delivered and able to go abroad; and for the maintenance (till the age of ſeven years) of all ſuch children whoſe mothers died in the houſe. It was given to the neighbouring priory and in many things ſubject to it, but had a diſtinct eſtate, which was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 305 l. 6 s. 7 d. per ann. as Dugdale, and 371 l. 13 s. 2 d. as Speed. It was given, in the year 1546. by K. Henry 8. to the lord mayor and citizens of London for an hoſpital, and ſtill continues ſo, to the comfort and relief of great numbers of diſtreſſed people every year.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW's PRIORY or Great St. Bartholomew's.

THE above mentioned Rahere [b] began A. D. 1123 [c]. and about the year 1133. finiſhed on the eaſt ſide of Weſt Smithfield a church or monaſtery for Black canons in honor of St. Bartholomew, whoſe yearly revenues at the diſſolution were 653 l. 15 s. as Dugd. and 757 l. 8 s. 4 d. ob.q.

[a] Raher's vow to build an hoſpital being more early than the viſion of St. Bartholomew, (which legend may be read in the Monaſticon) he is ſaid, in performance of it, to have built the hoſpital before the priory, (Newcourt, vol. i. p. 294.) but in what year is not certain. Leland, Stow, and their followers, make both the hoſpital and priory to have been founded, or begun at leaſt, A. D. 1102. which can't be the exact time, if it be true (as Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 169) that the intereſt of Richard biſhop of London was made uſe of by Raher to procure the king's favour for the ground to build on, for then it muſt not be till A. D. 1108. or after, Richard being not made biſhop till that year.

[b] He was the firſt prior here, and governed the houſe twenty two years. K. Henry 1. is ſaid to be founder, (Leland. Collect. vol. i. p. 54) as giving the ground on which both the hoſpital and priory were built, and ſome churches in Suffolk. And it muſt be confeſſed, that notwithſtanding Rahere is ſo much cried up in the monkiſh legend in the Monaſticon, there is no mention of him (but as prior only) in the charter of K. Henry 1. And nothing is ſaid of his being either founder or conſiderable benefactor in the charter of K. Henry 3. But by his means and ſolicitations very probably theſe houſes were begun, the buildings carried on and ſome endowment ſettled.

[c] This date ſeems to be plain from Mon. Angl. tom. ii. p. 169. a. and could not be before, if it was, (as it is there ſaid to be) in the time of William Corbuil archbiſhop of Canterbury.

as Speed[a]. The ſite was granted, 36 Hen. 8. to Sr. Richard Rich: But Q. Mary placed here a convent of Black or Preaching friers, who[b], under father Perſon, began to rebuild the nave of the church, which had been pulled down, but were turned out 1 Eliz. and the lord Rich again put into poſſeſſion.

TEMPLE.

The order of Brethren of the Temple of Solomon at Hieruſalem, commonly called Templars or Knights of the Temple, (which began in the year 1118.) being ſpread over the weſtern parts of Chriſtendom, and having ſeveral manors and eſtates given them in ſeveral counties in England in K. Stephen's time, it is not improbable that in the beginning of his reign they were ſettled in the chief houſe of their order in England, viz. the Old Temple without Holborn bars, on the ſouth ſide of the ſtreet near Southampton buildings. Here they continued till the year 1185. when was finiſhed a more commodious habitation for them at the weſt end of Fleetſtreet, which was called the New Temple, where they flouriſhed in great wealth and honor under the government of a maſter, who was head of all the preceptories and houſes of theſe Knights in England, but he himſelf ſubject to the grand maſter of the order. This whole Religion (as 'twas called) or order, was by the contrivance chiefly of pope Clement 5. and Philip king of France, extirpated all over Europe about the year 1312. Among the greateſt part of their lands, this their houſe in London (after it had been for ſome time in poſſeſſion of the earl of Pembroke and of Hugh Deſpenſer jun.) was granted to the Knights Hoſpitalars of St. John of Jeruſalem, who leaſed the ſame to the ſtudents of the common law, in whoſe uſe it ſtill continues, tho' divided into two inns of court, viz. the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple.

ST. THOMAS OF ACON or Acres.

ON the north ſide of Cheapſide London, in the pariſh of St. Mary Colechurch, was founded by Thomas Fitz Theobald de Helles and Agnes his wife, ſiſter to Thomas Becket archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the latter end of the reign of K. Henry 2. an hoſpital to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin, and the ſaid archbiſhop now ſtyled ſaint and martyr. It was built upon houſes and lands formerly belonging to Gilbert Becket father to the archbiſhop, and wherein his famous ſon was born. This hoſpital conſiſted of a maſter and ſeveral brethren, profeſſing the rule of St. Auſtin, but were of a particular order, which was about this time inſtituted in the Holy Land, viz. "Militiae hoſpitalis S. Thomae martyris Cantuarienſis de Acon," being a branch of the Templars. The houſes and eſtates belonging to this houſe were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 277 l. 3 s. 4 d. [a] per ann. Dugd. 300 l. Leland. The ſite of the college of Acon was granted to Will. Gonſon 31 Hen. 8. and 33 Hen. 8. the collegiate church of Acon, with the chapter houſe, ſexton's chamber, churchyard, cloyſter, etc. were granted to the mercer's company, (in whoſe gift the maſterſhip was) part of which has been ſince called Mercer's chapel.

BLACK FRIERS.

THESE Black, Preaching or Dominican friers came into England A. D. 1221. and very ſoon after obtained an habitation near Holborn, on the weſt ſide of Chancery lane, on or near the place where Lincoln's inn now is. Here they lived about fifty five years, and then they begg'd or bought [e] ſome ground near Caſtle Baynard within the city, where, by the help of K. Edw. 1. and his queen, Rob. Kilwardby archbiſhop of Canterbury, and many other benefactors, they built a handſome church and convent. They had by houſes and ſhops within their precincts rents to the value of 104 l. 15 s. 4 d. per ann. at the ſuppreſſion. All which, with the ſite, were afterward granted to Sr. Thomas Cawarden.

GREY FRIERS.

These were Mendicants of the order of St. Francis, and called alſo Franciſcans or Friers Minors. They came out of Italy into England in the year 1224. and were lodged ſome ſhort time with the Dominicans near Holborn, and then John Travers one of the ſheriffs provided them an houſe in Cornhill, which being too ſtrait for them, John Ewin mercer and citizen of London [a], purchaſed a large void place of ground in the now demoliſhed pariſh of St. Nicholas, at the ſhambles near Newgate, where by his and other wealthy citizens munificence they erected a noble church, and all other offices belonging to a Religious houſe, and they continued till the diſſolution. The ſite of the priory was given, 38 Hen. 8. to the city of London, and, in the reign of K. Edward 6. it began to be repaired and furniſh'd for the maintenance of poor fatherleſs children, and to be called Chriſt's hoſpital, which ſtill continues, and may it long do ſo. In the valuation of 26 Hen. 8. theſe Grey friers are returned at 32 l. 19 s. 10 d.

St. ANTONY's.

On the north ſide of Threadneedle ſtreet, in the pariſh of St. Bennet Fink, was a ſynagogue of the Jews A. D. 1231. which was given by K. Henry 3. to the brethren of St. Antony of Vienna [c] in France, who ſettled here in an hoſpital conſiſting of a maſter, two prieſts, a ſchoolmaſter, and twelve poor brethren, beſides their proctors and other officers and ſervants. It being alien, was often ſeiſed during the wars with France. K. Richard 2. gave it to Mich. de la Pole [d], and the patronage of it was given by K. Edward 4. to the dean and chapter of Windſor, who made one of their canons maſter, tho' the ſchool continued after in great repute; and there were ſeveral poor men maintain'd, whoſe eſtate was valued, 35 Hen. 8. at 55 l. 6 s. 8 d. per ann.

ST. MARY OF BETHLEM or Bedlam.

SIMON FITZ MARY alderman and ſheriff of London gave, A. D. 1247. to the biſhop and church of Bethlem in Holy Land, where our Saviour was born, all his houſes and grounds in the pariſh of St. Botolph without Biſhopſgate, that there might be thereupon built an hoſpital or priory for a prior, canons, brethren and ſiſters of the order of Bethlem or the Star, wherein the biſhop of Bethlem was to be entertained when he came into England, and to whoſe viſitation and correction all the members of this houſe were ſubjected. In the year 1403. moſt of the houſes belonging to this hoſpital were alienated, and therein were no brethren or ſiſters, but only the maſter, who did not wear the habit of the order. However, it continued till the diſſolution, after which K. Henry 8. gave it to the city of London, who have of late years built upon the old ſite a moſt ſtately hoſpital for the reception and cure of lunatics or diſtracted perſons.

THE MINORIES.

Blanch queen of Navarre, wife to Edmund earl of Lancaſter, having encouraged ſome poor ladies of the new order of St. Clare or Minoriſſes to come into England, the ſaid Edmund obtained leave of his brother K. Edward 1. A. D. 1293. to build on the eaſt ſide of the ſtreet leading from the Tower to Aldgate, without the walls of the city, an abby for thoſe nuns to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin[c] and St. Francis. Its annual revenues, at the ſuppreſſion, were worth 311 l. 15 s. 1 d. mſ. Val. 318 l. 8 s. 5 d. Dugd. 342 l. 5 s. 10 d. ob. Speed. 418 l. 8 s. 5 d. Leland and Stow[d]. ELSING SPITTLE near Cripplegate.

ON the confines of the pariſhes of Aldermanbury [b] and St. Alphage [b], Will. Elſing citizen and mercer of London [c], A. D. 1329. founded a college for a warden, four Secular prieſts and two clerks; and an hoſpital furniſhed for the lodging of one hundred old, blind and poor perſons of both ſexes; blind, paralytic and diſabled prieſts to be prefer'd: But A. D. 1340. he changed the college of Seculars into a prior and five Regular canons of the order of St. Auſtin. This houſe was dedicated to St. Mary, and had in it nine canons before the diſſolution, when it was found to be endowed with 193 l. 15 s. 5 d. per ann. Dugd. 239 l. 13 s. 11 d. Speed. It was granted, 31 Hen. 8. to Sr. John Williams maſter of the king's jewels; and the next year, on Chriſtmas eve, it was burned down, he then living in it. Since which, in the place of this priory and hoſpital, is now a college, called Sion College, for the clergy of the city of London, incorporated 6 Car. 1. at the charge of Dr. Thomas White, who alſo here founded and endowed almſhouſes for twenty poor perſons.

[a] Stevens, vol. i. p. 159. ſaith it is a groſs miſtake to call this an abby and the governeſs abbeſs; for that this order doth not uſe thoſe names.

[b] [b] Hence in the records this houſe is ſometimes called "The hoſpital of St. Mary in the pariſh of Aldermanbury;" and ſometimes "St. Mary's in the pariſh of St. Alphage."

[c] Mr. Stow ſaith, that here was formerly a houſe of nuns. But quaere; for there is not the leaſt mention of them in the charter of foundation; but Elſing ſaith, that he founded this college and hoſpital on ſeveral tenements of his own in theſe two pariſhes.

POULTNEY or Pountney College.

Sr. John Poultney, who had been ſeveral times lord mayor of London, A. D. 1332. procured the king's letter to the pope for appropriating the church of St. Laurence in Candlewick (now Cannon) ſtreet, and another church, toward the endowment of a chantry of ſeven prieſts by him intended to be founded; which he afterward, about 19 Ed. 3. perfected and increaſed to a college conſiſting of a maſter or warden, thirteen prieſts, and four choriſters, to the honor of the Holy Jeſus and Corpus Chriſti. They had ſtalls and perform'd their divine offices in the chapel of Jeſus adjoining to the church of St. Laurence aforeſaid, from this founder called St. Laurence Poultney, and corruptly Pountney. The income of this college was rated, 26 Hen. 8. at 79 l. 17 s. 11 d[a]. per ann. Dugd. 97 l. Newcourt. The houſe was granted, 31 Hen. 8. to the earl of Suſſex; the church and rectory, 1 Ed. 6. to John Cheke; and other parcels to Oſbert Mundford and Tho. Gawdy, 2 Ed. 6.

St. STEPHEN's, Weſtminſter.

K. Stephen is ſaid to have begun a chapel in the old royal palace here, in honor of the proto-martyr of that name, which being finiſhed or rather rebuilt by K. Edward 3. in the year 1347. it was made collegiate, and that king therein eſtabliſhed a dean, twelve Secular canons, thirteen vicars, four clerks, ſix choriſters, and other officers and ſervants, whoſe ſeveral ſalaries were at firſt paid out of the exchequer, but afterward the founder and the ſucceeding kings and other benefactors endowed them with lands and other good rents to the value of 1085 l. 10 s. 5 d. per ann. Dugd. Speed. The ſite was granted, 4 Ed. 6. to Sr. Ralph Fane; and 6 Ed. 6. to Sr. John Gate. The chapel of this college hath been uſed many years for the place where in parliament time the houſe of commons ſit and diſpatch their great affairs.

ST. MARY OF GRACES[c], New Abby or Eaſt Minſter.

IN the new church yard of the Holy Trinity, eaſtward of the Tower of London, K. Edw. 3. founded a Ciſtertian abby A. D. 1349-50 [d]. and made it a royal free chapel. The abbat and monks were poſſeſs'd, at the diſſolution, of 546 l. 0 s. 10 d. [e] per ann. Dugd. 602 l. 11 s. 10 d. ob. Speed; and the ſite of their houſe was granted, 34 Hen. 8. to Sr. Arthur Darcy, in place of which is now, on Tower hill, the victualling office of the royal fleet.

CHARTER HOUSE.

Sr. Walter de Manny, one of the firſt knights of the moſt noble order of the Garter, in the year of the great plague 1349. bought a piece of ground without Weſt Smithfield bars, which he incloſed and got conſecrated for the burial of the dead. It was thereupon called the New Chirche hawe, and a chapel was built, wherein, about the year 1360. the above mentioned knight intended to found a college for a warden or dean, and twelve Secular prieſts; but in the next year that deſign was altered, when Michael de Northburgh biſhop of London joined with him in the building and endowing a priory in this place for double the number of Carthuſian monks, which was to be called The Salutation of the Mother of God, and was finiſhed about A. D. 1370. The yearly revenues of this houſe were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 642 l. 0 s. 4 d. ob.[a] Dugd. 736 l. 2 s. 7 d. Speed. The ſite was firſt granted (as 'tis ſaid) to Sr. Tho. DENTON's HOSPITAL.

ROBERT OF DENTON a clergyman in the year 1369. obtained the king's licence to found an hoſpital in honor of the Virgn Mary within the pariſh of Berkyng Chirche (now Alhallow's Barking) for ſuch poor prieſts or other poor men and women as ſhould be diſtracted, till they got well again and recovered their wits and memory. This good deſign could not then be brought to bear; ſo that the ſaid Mr. Denton was obliged to change his mind, and give the meſſuages he deſigned for this hoſpital to St. Catharine's near the tower, toward the maintenance of a chantry prieſt.

ST. MICHAEL Crooked Lane.

William Walworth [a] merchant, after lord mayor of London, A. D. 1380. by uniting ſeveral chantries in this church, and adding other eſtates and an houſe near the church for the habitation of a maſter and nine prieſts, inſtituted a college in the ſame, which continued till the diſſolution. This collegiate houſe, with the cloyſter, etc. was granted, 1 Mariae, to George Cotton and Thomas Reeve.

HOLME's COLLEGE.

Mr. Roger Holme chancellor of the cathedral of St. Paul (who died A. D. 1395 [b].) partly out of the eſtate of Adam de Bury ſometime lord mayor of London (to whom he was executor) and partly out of his own, ſettled an endowment for ſeven prieſts, who were to celebrate divine ſervice in a certain chapel dedicated to the Holy Ghoſt ſituate near the north door of this cathedral, toward the building of which this chancellor Holme had contributed largely. The lodgings and common hall belonging to theſe prieſts were in the pariſh of St. Gregory on the ſouth ſide of the cathedral; and were called Holmes or Hoome [c] college, which was granted, 26 Aug. 2 Ed. 6. to John Hulſon and W. LEADENHALL[a].

Sr. Simon [b] Eyre merchant, who had been ſome time lord mayor of London, built on the eaſt ſide of the quadrangle here, about A. D. 1419. a beautiful and large chapel, and gave three thouſand marks to the company of Drapers in London, upon condition that they ſhould, within one year after his deceaſe, eſtabliſh and endow perpetually a maſter or warden, five Secular prieſts, ſix clerks and two choriſters, to ſing daily ſervice by note in this chapel; and alſo three ſchoolmaſters and an uſher, viz. one maſter with an uſher for grammar, another maſter for writing, and the other for ſinging. The maſter's ſalary to be ten pounds per ann. every other prieſt's 8 l. every clerk's 5 l. 6 s. 8 d. and every choriſter's five marks. If the drapers refuſed to do this within one year, then the three thouſand marks to remain to the prior and convent of Chriſt's Church London, to eſtabliſh and endow as aforeſaid within two years. This was never done: But about A. D. 1466. a fraternity of ſixty prieſts (beſides other brethren and ſiſters) was founded here by William Rouſe, John Riſby, and Thomas Aſhby, prieſts.

WHITINGDON COLLEGE and Hoſpital.

In the church of St. Michael Royal London, which had been new built by the famous Sr. Richard Whitingdon, ſeveral times lord mayor of London, was founded by him, and finiſhed by his executors A. D. 1424. a college dedicated to the Holy Ghoſt and the Virgin Mary, for a maſter and four fellows, all to be maſters of arts, beſides clerks, choriſters, etc. And alſo on the eaſt ſide of the college they endowed an hoſpital for thirteen poor people, the chief of whom was to be called tutor. In the third year of K. Henry 6. there was allowed by the executors 63 l. per ann. toward the ſupport of the college till it could be better endowed; yet, after all the benefactions, the whole revenues of it were valued, 26 Hen. 8. at no more than 20 l. 1 s. 8 d. per ann. The ſite of the college was granted to Armigel Wade 2 Ed. 6. The almſhouſes for the poor men continued.

SAVOY.

In a place near the Strand, formerly belonging to Peter earl of Savoy, and by him given to the foreign hoſpital of Mont-Joy[g], king Henry 7. about A. D. 1505[h]. began and his executors finiſhed[i] an hoſpital for a maſter, four chaplains, and one hundred poor people[k], to the honor of the Bleſſed Jeſus, the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptiſt. It was valued, 26 Hen. 8. at 529 l. 5 s. 7 d ob. q [a]. per ann. as Dugdale, and ſuppreſſed June 10. 7 Ed. 6. Queen Mary refounded it in the third and fourth year of her reign; but it did not long continue an hoſpital for the poor, tho' there was a maſter of the Savoy many years after.

CAERLEON or Caeruſke [f].

It is ſaid by Jeffrey of Monmouth [g], Giraldus Cambrenſis [h], and their followers, that in this old city were built by the Britains long before the coming of the Saxons three magnificent churches, one of the martyr Julius, adorn'd with a convent of Religious virgins; a ſecond, dedicated to the honor of his companion St. Aaron, graced with a noble choir of canons; the third was for monks, and was the metropolitan church of all Wales, till that honor was tranſlated by St. David to Menevia. It is more certain that after the Conqueſt there was at Karliun or Karlynn an abbat and monks of the Ciſtertian order, whom K. John, whilſt earl of Morton, privileged to be free of paying toll at Briſtol [i]; and they had leave to appropriate the church of Llankathelen.

BERGAVENNY or Abergavenny.

Hamelin Balon or Baladun[a], one of thoſe who came over with the Conqueror, founded, in the latter end of his reign or the beginning of William Rufus, a priory here to the honor of the bleſſed Virgin. One of his poſterity Will. de Breoſa, temp. R. Joannis, gave the tithes of the caſtle and other privileges, on condition that the abbat of St. Vincent at Mans would ſend over hither a convent of their Benedictine monks. So it ſeems to have been for ſome time an alien priory cell to that foreign houſe. However, it was not diſſolved till the general ſuppreſſion, at which time here were a prior and four monks, whoſe revenues were worth 129*l.* 5*s.* 8*d*[b]. per ann. as in Dugdale, and 59 l. 4*s.* as Speed.

Here, in a very ſolitary valley, not long after the year 1108. was ſettled a priory of canons Regular, of the order of St. Auſtin, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt[c], who acknowledged Hugh Lacy for their founder. In the beginning here were above forty Religious, but, by reaſon of the hard uſage they met with from the rudeneſs, poverty, and barenneſs of the neighbouring country and people, the greateſt part of them removed, firſt to the biſhop's palace in Hereford, and after, viz. A. D. 1136. to a place near Glouceſter, which was alſo called from this mother-monaſtery Lantony (and ſometimes for diſtinction's ſake Lantony the Second) ſo that only thirteen canons were left here, which number in proceſs of time decreaſed, and the houſe was almoſt ruined; when K. Eward 4. (anno 21.) gave leave for the annexing this priory to Lantony near Gloceſter, here being to be maintained a prior dative and four canons: But it is to be doubted whether this union ever took full effect, becauſe the eſtate of Lantony the Firſt is valued diſtinct in 26 Hen. 8. at 87*l.* 9*s.* 5 d. per ann. mſ. Henry 6. the patronage of this priory, and leave to annex the ſame to the abby of Tewkeſbury; which being accordingly done, it was made a cell to that monaſtery, A. D. 1442. but three years after the Welſhmen drove away hence the Tewkeſbury prior and monks, who ſettled again here A. D. 1446. [c] Tho' there is a place not far from Chepſtow named Strighal, yet the monaſteries of Strigule and Chepſtow ſeem to have been the ſame; for that in the ancient valuations where Strigule is valued, there is no mention of Chepſtow; and in the late valuations where Chepſtow is valued, there is no mention of Strigule. Nor is there any mention of Chepſtow amongſt all the donations to Cormeil; but Striguil with its chapels and appurtenances is thereto given; as Mon. Angl. vol. ii. p. 964. The founder of Tintern abby is called in Leland's Itin. vol. vi. p. 15. "Dom. de "Stroghil alias Chepſtow." And I am informed that Chepſtow is called Striguile in old writings, and that the manor court is held by that name now.

NORTH ELMEHAM or Helmham.

THE kingdom of the Eaſt Angles, which from its firſt converſion by Felix had been under one biſhop, was, about the year 673. divided into two dioceſes, when one of the epiſcopal ſeats was fixed in this ancient[c] town. Here was a conſtant ſucceſſion of ten biſhops till the martyrdom of Humbert by the Danes with K. Edmund A. D. 870. About the year 950. the ſee of Dunwich appears to have been united to this of Elmham, whoſe juriſdiction extended again over that which was formerly the whole kingdom of the Eaſt Angles. This biſhopric was tranſlated from hence to Thetford A. D. 1075. and from thence it was quickly removed to Norwich, whoſe firſt biſhop Herbert rebuilt the pariſh church here; and this manor continued part of the poſſeſſions of the biſhopric of Norwich till 27 Hen. 8.

EAST DEREHAM.

ST. WITHBURGA, the youngeſt daughter of king Anna, having founded a nunnery here[d], was buried in the churchyard A. D. 743. but removed into the church fifty five years after, and from thence, in the year 974. tranſlated to her ſiſters at Ely; the monaſtery here being deſtroyed by the Danes. But the memory of this virgin ſaint was preſerv'd here in a chapel-gild-light, and more particularly by a famous well, which, as 'tis ſaid, ſprung up in the churchyard in the place where ſhe was firſt buried, all dedicated to St. Withburgh, though this laſt is now corruptly called St. Winifred's Well.

THIS ſolitary place among the marſhes, then known by the name of Cowholm and Calvescroſt, was given by a little prince called Horn to a ſociety of Religious heremites under the government of one Suneman about the year 800. who (with the chapel of St. Benedict by them here built) were all deſtroy'd in the general devaſtation of this country by the Danes under Inquar and Hubba A. D. 870. In the next century a holy man called Wolfric gathered ſeven companions hither and rebuilt the chapel and houſes; they had lived here ſixty years when K. Canute thought fit to found and endow this place for an abby of Black monks to the honor of St. Benedict[e] before A. D. 1020[f]. Its revenues increaſed ſo much as to be valued, 26 Hen. 8.
